The 1989 Koala Platinum Proof Set Is Here, But Not For Long!

Shortly after its release, the Perth Mint announced the 1989 Platinum Proof set was sold out at the mint. Due to the tremendous demand in Australia, the North American allocation was quickly reduced from 1000 sets to only 800 and demand is expected to dwarf the supply. Here's why:

- ✓ First Platinum Proof Set Ever Issued By Australia
- ✓ First & Only Year Of An Endearing New Design
- ✓ First Issue Of $5 Platinum Proof Coin By Australia
- ✓ First Five Coin Platinum Proof Set By A Major Country

1988 PLATINUM PROOF KOALA SOARS IN VALUE

If the past is any indication of the future, the 1989 Platinum Proof Koala is destined for success. The 1988 $50 Platinum Proof Koala (another "first" from Australia) sold out within four short months and is currently selling for 17% over its original issue price.

QUANTITIES ARE LIMITED

Due to the tremendous worldwide demand for these scarce platinum proof coins, PandaAmerica can only guarantee the low issue price of $1995 for the full five coin for the next 30 days. Don't wait until the price has gone up. Order your 1989 Platinum Koala Proof Set TODAY!

100% GUARANTEE

If for any reason you are not completely satisfied with your coins, you may return them to us in their original condition by registered or insured mail within 30 days for a full and prompt refund.

1 MITCH'S HOARD

OH!, what a tremendous mixture of Lincoln cents! For over 15 years, Mitch has been throwing AU and BU wheat cents into a large barrel, without regard to date or mintmark. If it looked AU or BU, he threw it into the barrel. The result is that we now have a barrel overflowing with AU/BU Lincoln cents (and many are fully BU). A sample scoop shows some coins in the 1930's; and many in the 1940's and 1950's. The mixture is also heavy in steel cents and "S" mints. It is truly a SUPER MIX! We do not have the time or ambition to sort all these coins, so we are going to sell them as is. We guarantee you will not be disappointed. These lots will be available as long as our supply lasts, or until Mitch finds out, whichever comes first, so hurry!

100 COIN LOT..... 14.95

2 GAMBLER'S SPECIAL

If you like to gamble, this is the lot for you. We have purchased over 500 bags of cents from an old timer. A sample shows a little of everything. These are teens, twenties, etc., etc. It looks like a great assortment. There will be nothing after 1958 though. These are all wheats. We sure don't have the time to sort all these bags so we will sell them just as they come. Best of all, we'll take away the gamble and reduce the price drastically. You can't lose. 300 coins per lot. Only..... 9.95

3 "P" MINT LINCOLN CENTS

4 "D" MINT LINCOLN CENTS

This lot consists of nothing but "D" mint wheat cents. At a quick glance, it looks like a nice date mixture. To make sure it's good, we'll throw in a 1912-D, 1932-D, and 1939-D, plus some steel cents. This 300 piece lot has got to be a good buy at only..... 16.95

We have just purchased a tremendous quantity of these popular coins. Nothing is dated after 1955. A sample shows war nickels, 1942-D, 1955, and even a 1939-D. This is the perfect lot for a startling dealer. 500 coins ..... 59.50

12 FANTASTIC LOT OF BU NICKELS

This is a tremendous hoard of Brilliant Uncirculated Buffalo and Jefferson nickels purchased from the same old gent who never saved anything but nickels and didn't know whether their value was $10.00 or 10¢. We did sneak a sampling of this lot and noticed a few as far back as Buffaloes. For the price it is hard to believe that we will even guarantee brilliant P & D & S War Nickels and a BU 50-D Jefferson. 1 lot of 100 coins as above ..... 49.50

We will even include some silver coins. If you haven't updated your collection, now is the time. We are pricing this lot cheap as we really don't have much of a market for proof singles.

25 "V" NICKELS

We will pull these "V" nickels out of the bag just as they come but we will assure you there is a nice date selection. This lot will start with a Fine or better 1883 NC and will end with a 1912-D and there will be some "goodies" in between.

1 roll of 40 coins is only ..... 17.95

NOTICE TO COIN BUYERS

In looking at advertisements in COINage Magazine, the reader should be aware that there is no precise or exacting science of grading coins. Opinions of two viewers of the identical coin can, and do, differ, even when they are experts, because perceptions as to the state of preservation are not always identical.

For grades that are circulated, there tend to be several well-defined and uniform criteria that are utilized, but the grades themselves may be different, because a circulated coin (and its grades) represents an impression or indication as to the amount of wear on the coin.

Uncirculated coins have no visible signs of wear, though they may have blemishes, bag marks, rim nicks, tarnish, or even be weakly struck (which often resembles wear). In uncirculated condition, there are many different grading opinions, some of which are described adjectively, others with numbers. Not all numbers have the identical meaning. This depends on the grading standard utilized.

The value of the item to the buyer should be determined by the price, not the grade. Your examination and satisfaction of the coins should be the criterion, not the grade represented by the seller, or a determination made by another.

Your best protection is your own knowledge and the trust that has developed between you and the dealer over a series of mutually satisfactory transactions.

All advertisers in COINage Magazine agree to a seven day unconditional moneyback guarantee with the exception of bullion and bullion-like coinage, whose dominant price element consists of the value of its precious metal.

If you are displeased with the purchase from an advertiser in COINage and do not receive proper satisfaction, please contact our advertising service department immediately.

Standards for grading by advertisers must specify which guideline or system is utilized. The notification may be within the context of the advertisement (if it varies from item to item), or by means of the following symbols which will appear in the bottom, right hand corner of the ad.

A American Numismatic Assoc. - Grading Guide

ANACS Coin is ANA Certified Standards then in effect

B Brown & Dunn

N NCI

P Photograde

G Accugrade

NGC Numismatic Guarantee Corp.

PCGS Professional Coin Grading Service

Some of these names are registered trade marks, or used under license. All uses in COINage Magazine shall be strictly in accordance with such authorized use.

Any other grading standard or system utilized must be specified. A combination of any of the above standards may also be used if specified. If there is no symbol, or other explanation, the reader must assume that the advertisers' grading standards are based upon their own personal experience.

Uncirculated coins in Mint State (MS) may be described with numbers or adjectives. Unless the advertisement indicates otherwise, the following standards are used:

MS-67: "Superb brilliant uncirculated" or "Superb gem uncirculated"

MS-65: "Gem Brilliant Uncirculated" "Gem Uncirculated"

MS-63: "Choice Brilliant Uncirculated" "Choice Uncirculated"

MS-60: "Brilliant Uncirculated" "Uncirculated"

COINage reserves the right, to which the advertisers consent, to monitor all merchandise offered in its pages and to make occasional test orders under assumed names to verify that coins are as advertised. Advertisers must agree to adhere to the minimum standards set above and understand and consent that violations may lead to suspension of advertising privileges.

Inadvertent typographical errors occur. Advertisements appearing in COINage should be considered requests to inquire, rather than unconditional offers of sale. All prices are subject to change at any time without notice.

The Strange Story of Canada's Rarest Half Dollar And Silver Five-Cent Piece

by Ed Reiter

When we look back through the annals of numismatics, certain dates stand out as major mileposts. Mention 1804 or 1913, for example, and the two great U.S. rarities associated with those years—the 1804 silver dollar and the 1913 Liberty Head nickel—come to mind at once.

Sometimes dates are significant not because they witnessed great rarities, but because they were the occasion for innovation or change. Such a year, for instance, was 1892, when the U.S. Mint not only struck its first commemorative coin (the Columbian half dollar) but also replaced the long-running Liberty Seated coinage with the new Barber series.

Few dates in the 20th century have been more significant, in numismatic terms, than 1921. It was a year of important change: The Morgan silver dollar gave way to the Peace dollar, and both kinds were produced. And it also was a year of low-mintage issues: All three Walking Liberty half dollars (P, D and S) produced that year, and both Mercury dimes (P and D), are key coins that carry hefty price tags.

The Canadian 5-cent piece (above) and 50-cent piece (left) of 1921, both silver, owe their rarity not to how few were minted, but to how many were melted. Photo courtesy of Bowers and Merena.

But 1921 was a big year for more than just this country's coinage. It also stands out in Canadian numismatic history—for two of Canada's rarest and most valuable coins are the 5-cent piece and half dollar bearing that date.

Interestingly, neither of these two great Canadian rarities had an exceptionally low mintage. Both are rare not because so few of them were made, but rather because so many of them were melted.

The 5-cent piece of 1921 wasn't a nickel; it was the last in a series of small silver coins issued in that denomination by the Canadians—a series very much like the U.S. half dimes, whose production came to an end in 1873.

The Royal Canadian Mint made nearly 2.6 million 5-cent pieces in 1921—a mintage only slightly smaller than that of the 1950-D Jefferson nickel in this country. While the '50-D nickel is scarce, it's hardly a great rarity, and Canada's smaller population makes that 2.6 million mintage the equivalent of about 26 million in the United States.

But change was in the air: Even as workmen were cranking out those silver 5-cent pieces during the early months of 1921, Royal Mint officials were finalizing plans for a new kind of 5-cent piece—a larger coin made of pure nickel—starting the following year.

The new nickel did indeed make its debut in 1922, and at that point Mint officials decided to accelerate the phase-out of the older silver coins. One obvious move in that direction was readily available: Virtually the entire mintage of 1921 5-cent pieces was still in inventory, never having been issued to the public. It's widely assumed that this huge stash of coins was dumped en masse into the melting pot one fine day (or several fine days) in 1922.

Experts believe that fewer than 500 coins survived the melt. Some of these were specimen strikes, sold to collectors who purchased sets, while others were business-strike pieces, most likely sold to visitors who came through the Mint in the early part of 1921.

The Standard Catalog of World Coins values the 1921 Canadian 5-cent piece at $20,000 in Mint State-63 condition. Even in Very Good, one of the lowest of all collectible grades, the book lists its value at $1,500.

The Royal Canadian Mint made 206,398 half dollars in 1921—not an especially low mintage by Canadian standards. The figure is virtually the same as the mintage of the 1921-D half dollar in the United States, but in relative terms—given Canada's much smaller population—this normally would have been a much more common coin.

There was, however, nothing "normal" about the 1921 Canadian 50-cent piece.

In Canada, as in the United States, demand for half dollars was relatively light throughout the 1920s. As a consequence, the U.S. Mint suspended production of this denomination in four different years during the decade and the Royal Canadian Mint didn't make any half dollars at all from 1922 through 1928.

Records indicate that the Royal Mint released only about 28,000 new half dollars into circulation during the early and mid-1920s, and it's generally believed that almost all of these were dated 1920. Thus, virtually the entire mintage of 1921 half dollars remained in government inventory.

Public demand quickened at last in 1929—but at that point, the Master of the Ottawa Mint made a fateful (and some might say curious) determination: He decided to melt the entire remaining stock of 1920 and 1921 half dollars (a combined total of 480,392 pieces) and recoin the silver into new 50-cent pieces bearing the current-year date of 1929.

The rationale may seem questionable to some: The Mint Master reasoned that, if a large quantity of coins with "old" dates began to appear, people would suspect that they were counterfeit. There can be no question, though, about the impact of this decision. The 50-cent piece of 1921 became, in the truest sense, an "instant rarity."

Students of Canadian coinage have concluded that fewer than 100—probably about 75—1921 half dollars survived the melt. As in the case of the 5-cent pieces, these were coins from specimen sets or pieces sold to visitors at the Mint.

A specimen strike described as "superb gem uncirculated" brought $35,000 at Auction '79 then realized more than triple that amount—an eye-popping $110,000 (including a 10-percent buyer's fee)—when it came up for sale again a decade later, in September 1989, at an auction conducted by Bowers and Merena Galleries of Wolfeboro, New Hampshire.

Bowers and Merena offered yet another 1921 Canadian half dollar in late March of this year at an auction held in conjunction with the 34th Annual Metropolitan New York Numismatic Convention. This piece was certified as MS-63 by the Professional Coin Grading Service (PCGS). Bidding was scheduled to open at $60,000.

The 1921 half dollar is commonly referred to as "The King of Canadian Coins." The rarest of all Canadian coins—the 1911 silver dollar—is accorded the somewhat more prestigious title of "Emperor."

Whatever names people choose to call them by, the Canadian 5-cent and 50-cent pieces of 1921 are among the greatest rarities of this century.

They add luster to Canadian numismatics. And they help ensure superstar billing for 1921 on the roster of coinom's all-time greatest years.

My Two Cents' Worth

BY ED REITER

We've heard a great deal of discussion and debate as to whether U.S. coins should be redesigned. Legislation that would authorize a form of redesign has been passed by the U.S. Senate and is under review in the House as this is written.

At this point, there's serious doubt that the current legislation—or any truly meaningful coinage redesign—will win approval, at least while the present obstructionist attitude prevails in some Washington circles. And this is not only unfortunate but ironic—for the fact of the matter is, the proposed legislation doesn't go nearly far enough.

What's actually needed today isn't just revision of the current coin designs: It's top-to-bottom revision of our whole system of coinage.

The idea is hardly revolutionary. The Treasury Department itself contemplated the possibility back in the mid-1970s, when it commissioned a comprehensive review of the U.S. coinage system. Interestingly, that study was aimed at determining what the nation's coinage requirements would be in 1990—this year—and how those needs might best be met by the Treasury.

The 1970s study was conducted by the Research Triangle Institute, a North Carolina consulting firm. It lasted more than a year and resulted in a two-volume, 540-page report examining in detail the then-current denominations and alloys, as well as options and recommendations for alternatives.

Among other things, that report recommended elimination of the cent by 1980, possible creation of a two-cent piece, discontinuation of the half dollar and introduction of a new, smaller $1 coin. As we now know, only one of these suggestions was adopted, and that one—the Susan B. Anthony dollar—proved to be an unmitigated disaster. Half-dollar production has lurched along at low levels, the two-cent piece never got off the drawing board—and rather than drop the cent, the Mint simply changed its composition in 1982, replacing virtually all of the copper with less expensive zinc.

Undoubtedly the fiasco with the ill-fated Anthony dollar has made officials in Washington gun-shy about undertaking similar major changes in the size, shape and value of our coinage. Rather than risking further opprobrium, they've stuck with the present coinage lineup—and this rigid resistance to change has extended to the coins' designs, as well. Even the conversion from copper to zinc in the cent clearly represented the path of least resistance, given the obvious fact that some kind of change was required from an economic standpoint.

For all the official stonewalling, though, it seems apparent in this, the target year of that 540-page Treasury-commissioned report, that our present coinage system is not the one best suited for meeting the nation's needs. In fact, it is riddled with flaws.

Essentially, we have been reduced to a system of only three truly circulating coins—the nickel, dime and quarter—since relatively few cents and hardly any half dollars actually see use in the nation's commerce. We also have a system where the cent and the nickel are both not only larger than the higher-valued dime but also more valuable intrinsically. And for all the demonstrated advantages of having a $1 coin, the Treasury seems determined to oppose any move in that direction—even one that remedies the earlier mistakes.

More than a decade has passed since the Anthony dollar fiasco, and several other nations—notably Australia, Britain and Canada—have successfully introduced small-size, high-value coins. But Uncle Sam seems intent on looking over his shoulder, at what took place in 1979, rather than up ahead at what we'll need tomorrow (and may even need today)

Back in 1981, California architect-coin collector Kirk Hillman wrote a perceptive analysis of the U.S. coinage system in The Numismatist, the official monthly journal of the American Numismatic Association. Hillman compared the system to "a very old house whose occupants over the years have added to and taken from the house in order to meet changing requirements."

"Eventually," he wrote, "the old house ceases to function well or efficiently meet the needs of the occupants. When it is realized that further remodeling will not solve the problems, the obvious solution of demolishing the house and constructing a new one becomes apparent. It would seem our current coinage system has reached this dead end, and it is time to develop a new one."

Hillman went on to propose a new system of 11 copper, silver and gold coins, graduated in size and also in value from five cents to $500. I wrote about his proposal in my Numismatics column in The New York Times, and the editors of the paper were so impressed that they made it the subject of an editorial.

In that editorial, entitled "Change Small Change," The Times wrote that Hillman's plan was "imaginative, attractive—but also elaborate."

"We're partial to a simpler idea, boosting the value of present coins one notch (making the penny worth five cents, etc.)," the editors stated. "But we'll enthusiastically support whatever solution is most likely to catch on. The House subcommittee on coinage and other members of Congress need to be persuaded that, with respect to small change, it's time for a large one."

More than eight years have passed since those words appeared in The Times. They're just as valid today—even more so, in fact, for if anything the need for coinage reform has grown more urgent.

Perhaps it's time for another in-depth study like the one that took place back in the mid-1970s. It's certainly time for some kind of study—for, if I may borrow Kirk Hillman's architectural analogy, our current coinage "house" is shaky at best and may well come tumbling down as it's pounded in years to come by the winds of change.

The previous study was meant to bring our coinage in line with the national needs of 1990. Having limped to 1990 with only three meaningful coins, can we now put our house in order before the turn of the century?

The time to begin the groundwork is today. ☺

The NEGLECTED DOLLAR

The Liberty Seated Series Calls For Closer Numismatic Attention

by R.W. Julian

Compared to the Morgan dollar, which is one of the most strongly collected coins of the United States, the Liberty Seated dollar has long been treated as a poor relative. This has been changing slowly as collectors learn of the interesting history behind this dollar, which was struck during more years than any other in our history. (There are 27 different dates for the Morgan series, but 34 for the Liberty Seated.)

It all began in 1835, when Mint Director Samuel Moore resigned and was replaced by Dr. Robert M. Patterson. The new director believed that our silver coinage designs were outdated and unworthy of a great nation. To remedy this, he set two talented artists, Thomas Sully and Titian Peale, to work on special artwork.

Sully was assigned the obverse, which was to be a seated figure of Liberty—similar to Britannia on the British coinage, yet distinctly American in character. Sully was to succeed brilliantly in his assignment; Patterson then turned over the artwork to Mint engraver Christian Gobrecht. (Peale designed the reverse.)

The engraver prepared a series of dies in which he gradually came closer and closer to the ideal figure required by Director Patterson. In the fall of 1836 patterns were struck and then, in December, 1,000 silver dollars of the new design were made for general circulation. These have the famous flying eagle on the reverse.

An additional coinage of 600 pieces was minted in March 1837 (using dies of 1836) and in 1839 another 300 dollars were struck. All of these were made for circulation, but only in small quantities, as Patterson was testing not only a new design but also the acceptance of the silver dollar into commerce after decades of non-use.

By 1840, Mint officials were convinced that the silver dollar would be a commercial success. Many banks kept their reserves heavily in half dollars, and Patterson felt that silver dollars would free up large numbers of the older half dollars for general public use.

In 1840, Director Patterson opened the doors of the Mint to deposits of silver by the public for coinage into dollars. Private citizens could normally bring silver or gold to the Mint for coinage and receive back whatever denominations they chose. However, this right had been restricted for silver dollars until the necessary decisions had been made on their general circulation.

For uncertain reasons, Patterson decided to scrap the superb flying-eagle reverse of 1836-1839 in favor of the old silver coinage reverse of 1807, in which the eagle is seated and has the national shield on its breast. It is possible that the powers-that-be decided to keep the old design in order to maintain consistency with the quarters and half dollars then (in 1840) being struck.

Before heavier coinage began in 1840, however, Patterson hired Robert Ball Hughes to modify the Seated Liberty design on most of the silver coinage, including the dollar. This was done primarily to improve the striking quality of the coinage; the design had to be brought up as well as possible, so that the public would receive quality coinage.

In July 1840, the coiner was instructed to begin minting the new dollars, and in that month 12,500 were made. This first striking was not all that popular, and it was not until November that coinage resumed in force. Only 61,005 dollars were made in 1840, but it was a good beginning. Banks soon saw the convenience of having dollars rather than half dollars as bank reserves, and during the course of the 1840s many of them moved the new coins into their vaults.

From 1841 to 1843, more than 50,000 silver dollars were made, demonstrating that depositors were interested in the new coins. Later issues of the 1840s tended to be much smaller, but other silver coins also showed a marked decline in mintages.

The collector will have no problem obtaining choice specimens of these silver dollars, especially for 1840-1843, when production was relatively high. In XF-40, the price varies from $400 to $500—and, even in VF-20, the cost is $300 or somewhat more. Proofs exist for the 1840s, but are not seen all that often.

Most of the coinage for the Liberty Seated dollars was executed at the Philadelphia Mint, but as early as 1846 New Orleans struck 59,000 pieces for use by depositors. Demand in Louisiana was relatively light, however, as it was not until 1850 that coinage resumed. After that,

New Orleans had to wait another 10 years.

It's not quite clear to what use the New Orleans coinage of silver dollars was put, but it's thought that many of them were destined for trade with Latin America and the Orient. The low coinage, however, indicates that not all that many went abroad.

The 1850-O silver dollar is considerably scarcer than the 1846-O, and the collector will have to pay well for the privilege of owning one. In XF-40 the book value is $1,000, while in F-12 the value is about $400 to $500.

In the late 1840s, the coinage of silver dollars began to be affected by something over which the Mint had no control. Gold was discovered in California in 1848, and by the spring of 1849 tens of thousands of miners were on their way to El Dorado to make their fortunes. Some did, most did not, but still vast amounts of gold were torn from the earth.

The large quantities of gold entering the world market upset the delicate ratio between gold and silver, and soon silver coins came to be worth more than face value in terms of gold. Large numbers of U.S. silver coins were bought up by speculators and shipped to Europe for melting.

Little silver now reached the mints, although there was an occasional burst of coinage in the late 1840s and early 1850s. The 40,000 dollars struck at New Orleans in 1850, for example, may have been nothing more than the attempt of several exporters to cash in on the silver demand; silver dollars, with a recognized value and silver content, would have been easier to sell abroad.

From 1849 to 1853, the government struggled to provide the public with a circulating medium. There was plenty of gold around, but silver was in short supply. The coinage of copper was increased to meet the sudden demand, but silver required bullion—and that was hard to come by.

The period from 1850 through 1852 was a lean one for silver dollars, most notable for the odd coinage at New Orleans in 1850. During these three years, the Philadelphia Mint struck fewer than 10,000 dollars in all, indicating an almost total lack of demand. Who wanted silver dollars when the metal could be sold in Europe for better prices?

The bottom was reached in 1851-1852 with coinages of 1,300 and 1,100 pieces, respectively. The 1850, with only 7,500 struck, is not far behind. For obvious reasons, collectors have made great efforts to obtain the dollars of 1851-1852, and prices reflect this at present.

In the Norweb III sale (Bowers and Merena, November 1988), an MS-64 prooflike dollar of 1851 brought $35,200, while an even finer 1852 fetched $17,600. (The 1851 is clearly the rarer of the two, the Norweb catalog estimated that perhaps as few as 20 in all grades exist of the 1851.)

The situation for 1851-1852 dollars is somewhat confused, as restrikes exist of both dates in proof and also bring high prices. At Norweb III, this meant $37,400 for the proof 1852 restrike—a great rarity in its own right. (The restrikes were mostly made in the late 1850s.)

As one of the oddities connected with the coinage of 1851, it may be noted that the Mint expected a large coinage of silver dollars in that year. Chief Engraver James B. Longacre prepared four obverse and 11 reverse dies in anticipation of a coinage that never came.

In 1853, the government finally solved the shortage of silver coinage by passing a law which reduced the weights of the half dime through the half dollar; the dollar was not touched. The public could still bring in silver for coinage, but now only dollars could be obtained in exchange for the bullion. Because the dollar now contained too much silver to circulate in the marketplace at par, the 1850s saw very few silver dollars being struck.

There was some recovery in dollar coinage after 1852—it could hardly have gone much lower—but another bottom was reached in 1858, when no dollars were coined for circulation. Proofs were struck for collectors, and today these are highly sought after by those needing the 1858 dollar to complete a date set.

In the 1870s, someone at the Mint estimated that only 80 silver dollars had been made in 1858, but this figure is too low, as at least that many still exist. It is more likely that something like 200 pieces were coined in 1858, most of which were sold to collectors. In the desperate wartime years, many of these would have been spent or melted, accounting for the reduced number known today. The gem Proof-64+ in Norweb III brought $12,100.

Beginning in 1859, there was sudden and still unexplained coinage of silver dollars at both Philadelphia and New Orleans. Even San Francisco joined in with 20,000 pieces in 1859. During 1859 and 1860, several hundred thousand dollars were produced at the New Orleans and Philadelphia mints.

The sudden heavy mining of silver in the American West, and increasing nervousness over the political situation in the United States just before the Civil War erupted, may have caused this sudden massive increase in production of silver dollars. Large numbers of these were later melted, although it is unknown whether this was done by the government or private parties.

The New Orleans issues of 1859-1860 fared better than those of Philadelphia and are more readily available to collectors. In AU-50, the book value for Philadelphia examples varies from $1,000 to $1,200 for the two years, while the price for a New Orleans piece is a much more reasonable $500.

With the outbreak of war in early 1861 the number of dollars coined showed a dramatic drop, but not as severe as in 1851-1852. Most of the wartime dollars appear to have been struck for export trade to Latin America and the Orient, though very little is known at present of this facet of American commercial affairs.

It is known that, because of hoarding, dollars struck from 1861 through 1867 are much more reasonable in price than those of the 1850s. The more common issues (after 1862) may generally be obtained for under $500 in XF-40—a bargain, considering that their mintages are far lower than Philadelphia dollar coinages of 1859-1860.

In 1866, the motto, "In God We Trust" was added to the reverse die, the result of increased religious sentiment during the war. The reverse was much better balanced by the addition of the scroll containing the motto.

Beginning in 1868, there was another sharp rise in the mintage of silver dollars but this time the reason is known. Prior to that time, there had been a great demand in Europe for American silver and gold to pay for debts incurred during the war. The demand abroad for American silver underwent a serious decline in 1868, leaving producers and bullion dealers with large amounts of silver on hand.

The 1853 law had permitted individuals to deposit silver in exchange for dollars, and this was increasingly done from the middle of 1868. By 1871, the coinage of dollars had passed the million mark at Philadelphia. Oddly enough, little of this silver was coined at the Western mints in San Francisco and Carson City, indicating that Eastern bullion brokers were the chief depositors.

The last Liberty Seated dollars are among the most common issues to be found by collectors, at least for the Philadelphia Mint. Issues of the other mints are quite scarce and bring high prices. Only a handful of the 1870-S dollars are known, and these bring high prices at auction—$126,500 for an AU-50 in Norweb III, for example. A superb prooflike 1871-CC brought nearly $20,000 at the same sale.

Yet, for the average collector with a serious interest in Liberty Seated dollars, the XF-40 price of about $300 is well worth considering for the Philadelphia issues of the early 1870s.

The beginning of the end for the Liberty Seated dollar was, ironically, the increased mining of silver in the West in the late 1860s. There was suddenly too much of it around and no place to go except in the coinage of dollars. In response, the government in 1873 created the Trade dollar and abolished the regular silver dollar.

With the last strikings of the Liberty Seated dollar, in March 1873, came the end of an era. These coins passed into numismatic history.

NEW Columbus Coins

Big Political Guns Are Ready To Fight Over Successors To Our First Commemorative

by Paul M. Green

It's one of those dates you can't forget. In 1492, Christopher Columbus discovered a group of Caribbean islands which he felt were part of India.

Whatever your view on this effort (that he discovered the New World, proved the Earth was round or simply had the best press agent of the early explorers who crossed the Atlantic), Columbus has gotten the credit, and we're about to reach the 500th anniversary of his discovery.

This 500th anniversary is a natural for commemorative coinage—so natural, in fact, that none other than Frank Annun-

Shown here are examples of the first officially authorized U.S. commemorative. A second set of coins honoring Columbus' discovery of the New World is proposed for 1991 and 1992.

zio, former chairman of the House Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage, has come up with the required legislation.

Annunzio's proposal for Columbus commemoratives goes beyond anything authorized previously in this era of modern commemoratives. It calls for three coins (one gold, one silver and one clad) in both 1991 and 1992 to honor Columbus.

This could possibly provide the nation, and more specifically collectors, with six different Columbus coin designs—twice as many as the Los Angeles Olympics, Statue of Liberty and Congress bicentennial coin programs, the current co-champions with three apiece.

If Annunzio's legislation is passed, this will make the second time Columbus has been featured in a two-year commemorative coin program. The first was in 1892 and 1893, when U.S. commemorative coinage made its debut with identical (except for the date) half dollars in honor of what was then the 400th anniversary of the expedition. Those coins were issued in conjunction with the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago.

Just as there may be some historical dispute over the true importance of the Columbus expedition, there may be some technical questions such as whether the Columbian Exposition half dollars were actually the first U.S. commemorative coins.

There is no question that they were the first officially authorized commemoratives. That came about as a result of the Act of Congress of Aug. 5, 1892, which authorized up to five million of the coins to help cover the cost of some of the buildings and exhibits at the exposition, which was scheduled to open in October of 1892.

Forty-four years earlier, in 1848, with the arrival of the first gold from the newly discovered California gold fields, a special distinguishing mark "CAL" (for California) was punched above the eagle on the reverse of 1,389 regular-production quarter eagles ($2½ gold pieces) to denote the source of the gold. While many may not view these as commemorative coins, there can be no doubt as to the commemorative nature of the extremely desirable punches on this small number of 1848 quarter eagles.

Just as the presence of Indians or evidence of other expeditions to America in no way diminishes the popular acclaim for Columbus, the 1848 "CAL" quarter eagles do not lessen the importance of the Columbian Exposition half dollars.

The most obvious similarity between the first Columbian half dollars and the commemorative coins of today and tomorrow is their purpose: to raise money.

In the case of the first Columbian halves, the money was for an exposition which was in severe financial trouble long before it was ready to open its doors to the first visitor. Today, the surcharges added to the prices of commemorative coins are earmarked for causes ranging from reduction of the national deficit to restoration of national monuments.

The Columbian Exposition half dollars experienced a certain amount of difficulty in their design stage, and this kind of problem has continued to the present day. In the case of the Columbian halves, the Board of Gentleman Managers of the World's Columbian Exposition made a number of design suggestions to the Mint. Through a board member, it even commissioned a sculptor to prepare a bust of Columbus (an interesting exercise, in light of the fact that no portraits made during his lifetime are known to exist.) The idea, while well-intentioned, was rejected by Mint Chief Engraver Charles E. Barber.

The board suggested the adaptation of a portrait on a medal by Enrique Lopez Lorensis for use on the coin - but this, too, got nowhere with Barber. Eventually, Barber just went off and designed the obverse himself and a similar process was followed for the reverse - probably leaving the officials of the exposition to wonder why they had ever bothered to make suggestions for their coin in the first place.

If modern artists who have submitted designs in recent Mint design competitions have had a similar feeling after losing to arguably inferior in-house entries, they may at least find some comfort in knowing that they are hardly the first outsiders to find their ideas (however worthy) being ignored.

and much to-do about the production of the first example of a new commemorative coin and you have the modern first-strike ceremony. The locations, names and coins may change, but the basic formula remains the same—with the added attraction that dignitaries and a few favored numismatic supporters of the Mint get the honor of having their picture taken as they "strike" a coin.

While the heart-stopping excitement (complete with refreshments) of the modern first-strike ceremony may seem like a hard act to top, it really almost pales by comparison with the first-strike ceremony held for the Columbian Exposition half dollar.

Consider for a moment the notion of paying $10,000 for the first coin struck. Remember, too, that the year was 1892, when $10,000 went much farther than it does today. That's exactly what happened with the first strike of the Columbian half dollar. Actually, the $10,000 coin that went to the Remington typewriter people was the second coin struck, as the first was deemed to have flaws.

Naturally, with the lure of a $10,000 coin, the Columbian Exposition first-strike ceremonies generated a lot of publicity—something that remains the goal of such ceremonies even today. As the government is now responsible for the ceremonies, there is much more hesitation about trumpeting the value of the first coins struck—but otherwise, in intent and execution, the first-strike ceremony remains relatively unchanged after nearly 100 years.

There are still more parallels.

The authorization for the Columbian half dollars was five million pieces, a figure which could easily be inserted into a modern program as the mintage for silver dollars. Moreover, just as the exposition officials couldn't sell five million half dollars in 1892 and 1893, the Mint is having no better luck selling its entire coin authorizations today—despite the expenditure of millions of dollars on advertising.

Buyers of commemoratives (at least in the short term) have on occasion had their difficulties, as well. In the case of the Columbian halves, the public purchased them for a dollar apiece at the exposition. We have no record of anyone grumbling over the price, but when the nation went into a financial panic in 1893, it's safe to assume a lot of buyers were happy just to have the coins accepted for their face value, even though this represented a 50-percent loss.

In recent years, although there have been some issues—like the Statue of Liberty gold coins—which posted gains, declines from issue prices have been the rule, rather than the exception. In fact, that trend as much as anything is likely to hurt potential sales of 1991-92 Columbus commemoratives.

The big question still to be answered, however, is whether there will in fact be 1991-92 Columbus commemoratives. Although the measure now enjoys support from a majority in the House of Representatives, it is hardly unique in that respect. There are currently a number of commemorative coin proposals sitting in the House with a majority of that body as co-sponsors.

In fact, one which would authorize gold, silver and clad coins commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Mount Rushmore monument not only has a majority of the House as co-sponsors but has already been passed by the Senate.

Another, commemorating the 50th anniversary of the United Service Organization (USO), also has a House majority.

To some, the difference between the Columbus proposal and these and all others is that Congressman Frank Annunzio has long wanted a Columbus commemorative.

In the past, Annunzio's support was enough to assure passage. This time, however, things may be different, as the Illinois Democrat still must deal with House Banking Committee Chairman Henry Gonzalez of Texas, who has seen Annunzio play a leading role in preventing passage of Gonzalez's legislation to change circulating coin designs. A confrontation between these two House heavyweights is becoming increasingly possible since, realistically, any legislation will have problems without both at least consenting.

A Columbus commemorative could also have problems in the Senate. There, it is worth remembering that just one senator, Max Baucus of Montana, was able to stop a six-state commemorative coinage bill until it was modified to include a palladium coin. As the House wouldn't go along, the six-state commemorative has been stymied.

In the case of a Columbus coin, Annunzio might well be faced with payback time in the Senate. In all probability, no senators oppose a Columbus coin, but the name Annunzio may cause problems for the proposal, as a number of senators are aware that Annunzio is at least partially responsible for the failure of circulating coin design changes to pass the House, even though the Senate has passed the measure unanimously on a number of occasions.

As Baucus proved, if even one senator decides "No design changes, no Columbus coin," then Annunzio will be faced with a choice he almost certainly never imagined. In fact, with the Senate so in favor of design changes, it would not be totally surprising to see design changes added to Annunzio's own Columbus coin bill.

With many legislative possibilities, and some strong-willed people involved on both sides, it's impossible to predict whether a Columbus coin proposal will pass—and, if it does, what form it may take.

COMPUTERS And Coin Collecting

Are You Aware Of The New Programs That Are Geared To Numismatics?

by Bob Wolenik

In case you hadn't noticed, the coin field is rapidly entering the computer age. Today there are over a dozen different coin programs that help you to catalog, track and price your collection. In addition, new and revolutionary programs are being written which will actually help grade coins! (See accompanying article — Editor.)

Of course, while the coin field may be computerizing, you may not see the need for it yourself. After all, you probably have been keeping track of your coins on three-by-five cards for years. Why change now?

There are many reasons. You may want to computerize your collection to track it better, to get automatic printed reports such as "want lists," to have your coin values automatically updated, and to do it all with a minimum amount of time and effort. You see, inventorying (which is the essence of keeping track of a coin collection) is something at which a computer excels. It's also something which most of us find boring, tiring and exasperating. So why not let the computer do what it does best — take care of your collection?

To help you in your decision, we're going to look at a number of computer programs that are currently on the market. Most of these programs are for the IBM and compatibles. However, some are for other brands such as Apple and Macintosh.

Of course, your big question may be, should I even bother with any computerized coin program? Here are some guidelines:

Yes, you should get a coin computer program if:

- you own a computer;
- you have a collection of thirty-five or more coins;
- you regularly trade (buy/sell) coins;
- you have a "want list" of coins;
- you want to generate printed reports on your coin inventory.

No, you should not get a coin computer program if:

- you don't own a computer;
- you have less than thirty-five coins. (If you have more than thirty-five, you may want to consider buying a computer—you can use it for far more than just your collection.);
- you aren't actively involved in trading.

Even if you aren't contemplating buying a coin computer program in the near future, you owe it to yourself to check out the programs listed below. You may be amazed at the features they offer:

COINS/PLUS from Compu-Quote: IBM and compatibles, 5¼" or 3½" formats, 384K RAM minimum, MS-DOS 2.1 or higher, hard disk recommended. Apple II, 3½" or two 5¼" drives, ProDOS, 128K

RAM (for the Apple IIe must have 65C02 CPU chip.) Macintosh, 512K RAM, 800K floppy or hard disk.

Who should use this program:

- collectors/investors;
- those who want to have their coin values automatically updated;
- those who are unfamiliar with computers.

Who should not use this program:

- larger dealers.

"Coins/Plus," or at least the ancestor of this current version, was one of the first coin programs introduced that included a data base of existing coins. (It may have been the very first commercial coin program.) Its outstanding feature (back in 1982 and still an important consideration), is the automatic valuation of coin prices.

This program contains a listing of 2,300 U.S. coins, including standard coins as well as U.S. commemoratives. In the current version, when you purchase a coin, you simply check the documentation to find the number of the coin that the program uses. Then you enter that number. Immediately, on-screen, you are given the denomination, mint, year, type and description as well as current values in a variety of grades. (Of course, you can also enter coins not found in the database.) You add the year purchased, from whom, cost and other information pertinent to the eventual sale of the piece.

Once a year Compu-Quote provides an updating disk. When added to the program, it automatically updates the values

Today, more than a dozen different computer programs can help you catalog, track and price your coin collection—which makes them worth examining.

The Sunshine name has been an integral part of the American precious metals industry for over 100 years. Since its discovery the "Sunshine," America's largest silver mine, has yielded over 335 million ounces of silver from its site in Kellogg, Idaho.

In addition to mining, refining, minting and marketing silver and gold direct to investors, Sunshine has outstanding custom minting facilities. Sunshine has proudly created customized bullion bars and medallions and specialty incentive items for hundreds of organizations such as Hershey's, Coors, the U.S. Forestry Service, and Special Olympics. Sunshine has also produced silver blanks for the U.S. Mint's silver dollar program.

Whether you need commemorative medallions for special corporate events, fund-raising items or marketing promotions, Sunshine's custom minting program can take you from concept and design through to state-of-the-art minting.

of the coins in your collection. Again, if you don't agree with the value entered, you may enter your own.

In addition you can print an itemized listing of your entire collection, a one-page summary of the total number of coins, total value and calculated profit, an itemized list of all coins you have sold from your collection and a want list of all the coins you need. A companion program, "The Reporter," allows you to modify and create specialized printed reports.

The documentation is quite good and the program is menu-driven. Even a first-time user should have no problems here.

COINS/PLUS from Compu-Quote, 6914 Berquist Ave., Canoga Park, CA 91307, (800) 782-6775 (818-348-3662 in California) —$95. "The Reporter"—$45. Commemorative data base including valuations —$45. Demo disk—$15.

(Compu-Quote also offers a similar program for comic-book fans called "Comic-Keeper." It includes a data base of "Super Heroes of the Silver Age" comic books and automatically gives prices as well as updates on an annual basis. It sells for $95.)

COIN ELITE from Trove Software: IBM and compatibles, 5¼" or 3½" formats, 256K RAM minimum, MS-DOS 2.0 or higher.

Who should use this program:

- collectors/dealers with a large inventory of coins;
- those unfamiliar with menu-driven computers;
- when specific reports are required (can design your own reports).

Who should not use this program:

- collectors with small portfolios.

This remarkable software (remarkable because it does so much, yet is available for as little as $59) allows you to inventory your collection, find recent prices for your coins by grade and produce useful reports such as a list of the coins you own or want to acquire.

Unlike other programs we looked at, CE ("Coin Elite") operates on the basis of a spreadsheet. (If you've run an electronic spreadsheet, then you'll feel right at home, here.) It is a menu-driven program which comes complete with files set up for most U.S. coins such as "Large Cents" or "Dimes." Subheadings list coin types such as "Small Cents, Lincoln, Wheat Back, 1989 to 1958."

Once you enter the category for your coin, you access the data base. Simply search for your coin, select the coin description including mint and type, for example, "1909 S VDB," and the grade, "FF-40." Instantly the current value comes up on the screen. As soon as you exit the Editor function, your entries are permanently saved to the diskette.

(Values, according to W. Richard Smith, president of Trove, are basically taken from Numismatic News, then correlated with trends from Coin World, the "Red Book" and other sources.)

Of course, the true test of any program is its ability to generate reports. A variety of ready-to-go reports is available from CE. These include a list of all the coins you own, the coins you've sold and the coins needed to complete a collection.

CE offers four separate data bases: U.S. regular issues 1793 to date, U.S. commems, Canadian coins and Mexican coins. You get one data base when you order the software; additional data bases are available for $20 (discount for buying more than two). Each data base contains a complete description of virtually all the coins (3,500 coins, for example, in the U.S. regular issue) in its category. It also includes coin prices by grade.

Additional features of the program allow you to design your own reports, inventory any type of coin or virtually any size collection, and update your coin prices. (Updates are available twice yearly for $20.)

Trove Software actually makes six different programs for collectors—one for dealers and heavy investors, another for general collectors (available in two versions) and three others for paper money collectors. (We looked at "Coin Elite," the middle program designed for coin collections.)

Put it all together and "Coin Elite" is a program which allows you to quickly and easily create an inventory of your coins, their condition and their value. Priced at $79 with coin prices and one data base, $59 without coin prices but with one data base. Demo disk available for $5. From Trove Software, PO Box 218, Olathe, KS 66061, (800)548-8901.

COMPUTERIZED COLLECTIBLES

from Dynamic Software: IBM and compatibles, 5¼" formats, 256K RAM minimum, MS-DOS 2.0 or higher and a minimum 5-MB hard disk available in full-size for dealers and reduced size for investors.

Who should use this program:

- dealers and collectors with very large portfolios who are constantly trading;
- those with an understanding of data base programs.

Who should not use this program:

- collectors and investors with small to medium-sized portfolios;
- those who are unfamiliar with computers;
- those who want automatic updating

"Computerized Collectibles" is a data base manager specifically designed for use with coins. It allows you to inventory a large amount (up to a million records) of material in a variety of fields.

How some people will earn 24% annually on their investments before we see a penny

Last June Hannes Tulving Rare Coin Investments completed the formation of a new limited partnership called Speculative Coin Fund I.

Although this particular partnership is now closed to new investors, there will be others in the future. So we thought you might like to learn about the terms of this one.

The group has invested in rare coins for short term profits. No fees or commissions were charged to the investors. All costs of forming and operating the partnership are being paid by us, the General Partner.

Commissions are not charged for buying or selling. And there are no management fees.

In addition, we will not participate in any profits until each investor has received a cumulative return of 24 percent per year! All profits over 24 percent will be split 50-50 between the General and Limited Partners.

That means we have a very big incentive to make sure the investors realize that 24%.

Wonder how we can be so confident that we'll reach such high profit levels?

Call or write for our brochure which describes our 13 year history of rare coin investing. You'll learn that we are the largest investment group of this kind in the nation, led by one of America's most respected rare coin experts, with an impeccable reputation for integrity.

You'll also learn that our investors have experienced average profits of over 20% per year since 1976

CHARTING THE COIN POPULATION

A Computer Program That Helps You Analyze The Coin Market

by Robert Perez

With the advent of certified coin population reports, it's possible now to use these figures to help determine what coins you should buy. And computers can play an important role in this process.

The main reason to use price/population information is to get the best value for your investment dollar. Price/population data allow the type collector to choose the best value of a given type coin. Instead of buying a common-date type coin, the collector can choose a much rarer date for a modest premium. Another obvious use of price/population data is to choose undervalued coins for investment.

Population reports are not 100-percent accurate. Uncertainty and error result from resubmissions, the existence of unreported hoards and, in some cases, the disproportionate ratio of certification cost to coin value.

Some of these factors can be overcome by simply comparing coins of similar attributes—that is, type, grade and cost. By comparing population figures of similar coins, some of the errors associated with certified coins can be "arranged out."

Even though the absolute rarity of a coin may never be known, its relative rarity can be assessed. And, through the use of proper analysis techniques, this relative comparison can be useful in estimating values.

One of the most powerful analytical tools available for objectively analyzing price/population data is correlation—or curve-fitting—theory.

tical techniques that allow one to determine whether a mathematical relationship exists between two or more variables. Correlation theory has been proven to be useful in assessing the values of a group of coins that cover a wide population range.

The curve-fit method of assessing price/population data requires you to draw (or calculate) a line or curve that best fits the data you are analyzing. Once the best-fit curve is found, you can determine how well your curve fits the data.

Consider the following example. In Figure 1A, there is a set of data. The horizontal axis represents population and the vertical axis represents price. You can see that there appears to be a mathematical relationship between population and price. You can conclude that if the population of a coin is small, the price is high; conversely, if the population of a coin is high, the price is low.

You can better define this relationship by performing a manual curve-fit. By drawing a line or curve that best fits the data in Figure 1A, you can define an equation that best describes the data. Figure 1B shows a curve that was "drawn in." Once the best-fit curve is drawn in, you can readily see several things: first, how well the data fit the curve; second, which coins are overvalued (those above the curve); and, third, which coins are undervalued (those below the curve).

Using correlation theory, you can analytically determine the best-fit equation and how well the equation fits the data analyzed. Using correlation theory to analyze the data from the previous example, it was found that the best-fit equation is: Price = $20,000 divided by Population.

You also will discover that in this instance the fit of the best-fit equation to the data is good. In this example, it was found that the correlation coefficient (r) was .956. A value of -1 or 1 for "r" means the correlation is perfect and that the best-fit equation exactly describes the relationship between population and price. A value of zero or near zero means there is no significant relationship between population and price.

Once the best-fit price equation is known, the following price ratio is calculated for every coin in the analysis: Price Ratio (PR) = Actual Price / Predicted Price. The price ratio is the actual price divided by the predicted price.

If the price ratio (PR) is less than 1, the coin is undervalued. If the PR is greater than 1, the coin is overpriced. In this example, if the actual price is $1,000 and the predicted price is $1,500, then the price ratio is $1,000/$1,500, or .66. The price ratio can be helpful in assessing coin values.

For different sets of price population data, there will be different best-fit price curves. This means that the best-fit price curve for MS-65 Morgan dollars will be different from the one for MS-60 Morgan dollars. Similarly, the best-fit price curve for Proof-65 Barber half dollars will be different from the one for MS-65 Barber halves.

Examples of different best-fit price curves can be seen in Figure 1C. In these examples, the best-fit price function for Series A is highly population-sensitive, while Series B is quite insensitive.

This illustrates why, for a valid analysis, you should compare only coins from the same series. Series which are widely collected as complete sets will probably have a predicted price function similar to Curve A. Series which are collected as type coins will probably have a predicted price function similar to Curve B.

Even though correlation theory is powerful, it requires a great deal of computation to execute all the equations needed for a meaningful analysis. It is very time-consuming to conduct a correlation analysis using manual computational techniques. This type of analysis is best handled with a mainframe or personal computer.

One computer program available to perform correlation analyses of price/population data is "Valueque$t."

"Valueque$t" can greatly simplify price ratio (PR) results through the use of its grading system. Table 1 illustrates this system. To better understand value grades, see Figure 2. In this figure is a predicted price function, along with three actual

Coinage history was made . . . When the U.S. Mint produced 7 different Cents in 1982!

In 1982, for the first time in history, the U.S. Mint produced 7 different Lincoln Cents — due to Large and Small Date varieties, production at 2 different Mints, and a change in metal from copper to zinc. These 7 Lincolns are very difficult to find and assemble on your own.

For a limited time, you can get all 7 different 1982 U.S. Cents, in a special holder, for ONLY $2 FROM LITTLETON! This is a special introductory offer, limit 3 sets per customer. You'll also receive our fully illustrated catalog (mailed separately), plus other offers on approval. Full 45 day money-back guarantee of satisfaction.

price/population data points. Point #2 falls right on the best-fit price curve. This coin would have a PR of 1 and receive a value grade of B. Point #1, which falls below the point, would have a PR less than 1 and receive a value grade of A. Point #3 would have a PR greater than 1 and receive a grade of C.

Another feature of "Valueque$t" is its flexibility. It may be used with either absolute or relative population data. Absolute population information represents actual population figures, while relative population information represents the relative proportion of coins surviving.

In the following example (see Table 2), both types of population data yield the same results. Population figures from PCGS and NGC really represent relative population figures, while Dr. Howe's figures are absolute figures. "Valueque$t" analyzes information in either format.

For this analysis, you would conclude that a $1,000 coin with a population of 1,900 represents the best value. Because this coin has a price ratio of .742, it will receive a grade of AA.

Here is a real example of analysis using "Valueque$t." I used Dr. Howe's population data for S-Mint MS-64 Morgan dollars. In Table 3, you can see the analysis results, which show that these coins have price ratios that vary from .38 (value grade of AAAA) for the 1896-S Morgan dollar to 3.21 (value grade of CCCC) for the 1884-S.

It was determined that the correlation coefficient (r) for this analysis was -.9852. Remember that a correlation coefficient of 1 or -1 means the correlation is perfect. In this example, an "r" of -.9852 means that the best-fit price function fits the actual

And Now...
COMPUTER
GRADING

Computers grading coins. It's a notion that has been with us for some time, as people seek an objective and consistent second opinion as to the grade—and, to a large extent, the value—of their coins.

To date, it's not a reality, at least not in public. But rumors persist: Computers can, will or are grading coins, depending upon which source you care to believe. With that possibility come many and varied questions and opinions.

To understand all this, you must remember that, while grading has been called many things, it has never been considered an exact science.

For literally decades, all a dealer and collector needed to determine grade was whether a coin was new or used. The financial stakes were small, except in the case of great rarities, and no one cared whether the box of new Lincoln cents contained pieces in what we might currently grade as AU-50 or in MS-67. A new coin was a new coin; some were just a bit better than others.

That notion progressed to adjectival grading, which divided the new coins and the used coins into various categories based on just how nice the new ones were and how used the circulated ones were. With those categories came different prices, although the financial stakes were still relatively modest.

It might have been the endless march of human progress, or perhaps it was simply a way to make more money—but, whatever the reason, the evolution didn't stop with adjectival grading. Instead, grading came to be based on a scale once used for early coppers—a 1-to-70 numerical scale which could loosely be translated into adjectives as well.

This development was not universally hailed—although, for all practical purposes, it remains with us today. What is gone is the financial innocence of simply charging a couple of dollars more for a Morgan dollar that grades MS-65 than for one that grades only MS-63.

With the advent of numerical grading, the process became a very precise activity, where thousands of dollars could be made or lost merely because of a one- or two-point difference when a coin reached the MS-63, -64, -65 and higher levels on the numerical scale. The rare coin market had become no place for the timid or the amateur.

Clearly, it was a serious concern to have thousands of dollars riding on one point in the numerical scale while simultaneously courting investors to spend their funds on rare coins. This problem reached a crisis point when investors discovered that one dealer's MS-67 Morgan dollar might grade MS-65 at the next table and, if so, they could be facing losses of thousands of dollars.

Stability and uniformity were needed—

not in the grading system itself, but in the actual grades assigned to coins, so that, when a buyer purchased a coin as an MS-65, he could have some reasonable expectation that, assuming proper care, the coin would later be accepted by a number of dealers as an MS-65 when he went to sell it.

Providing consumers with a reliable second opinion on the grades of their coins became the major challenge facing the rare coin industry in the 1980s. The American Numismatic Association tried, experienced some success, but was eventually surpassed in popularity by the Professional Coin Grading Service. Success bred competition for PCGS in the form of the Numismatic Guaranty Corporation.

There is at least one book and probably more waiting to be written about the impact of grading services. The main point is that, with experienced graders, the services brought a certain stability to the market, allowing the customer to buy a coin with greater assurance that the grade would be accepted by a number of dealers and not just the seller.

Systems Are On Their Way. What Will It Mean To Coin Collecting?

While PCGS and NGC have made remarkable progress in recent years (as have other less successful or newer services), there are still some issues which they have yet to resolve.

One of the biggest lingering concerns about grading is that of consistency. It is common knowledge that coins on the border between two grades are submitted over and over until they receive the higher grade. Even at the cost of being graded many times, a coin purchased at an MS-64 price which can eventually receive an MS-65 grade from one of the services can make the dealer, collector or investor thousands of dollars.

In theory, a computer could examine the same coin repeatedly with identical results. That would eliminate this possibility that the same coin might receive different grades from the same grading service, and would provide the consumer with a firm, unchanging grade for his or her coin.

A second issue which has dogged most grading services has been the potential for conflict of interest. NGC has been a leader in taking steps to avoid that problem, and PCGS has recently sought to remove any potential for conflict there, as well. Even so, computers would be better yet: They can do many things, but one thing they can't do is buy and sell coins.

Even with the added security of grade permanence and prevention of potential conflicts of interest, computers will not arrive on the numismatic scene to universal applause. In fact, there are questions—serious questions—about computers and their future role in grading.

"Garbage in, garbage out" is a phrase well known to those who work on computer programs. While the technology for a system of computer grading is already at least theoretically possible, the computer will grade only as it is instructed to do. And this is a challenge to anyone embarking on computer grading, as you need to mix both the technology and the skills of a top grader.

An additional issue in computer grading is the cost. Grading services represent investments of hundreds of thousands—if not millions—of dollars. To add a computer grading system would, by all estimates, cost well over a million additional dollars—with no guarantee of the acceptance required to produce a good return on the investment.

Perhaps the biggest stumbling block for computer grading is acceptance. Many have a vested interest in retaining the current system: submitting a coin a number of times to a grading service until you get the desired grade may be a lot of work and some expense—but, assuming that it eventually gets the desired grade, it can be very profitable.

There also remain a number of questions which a computer cannot answer. A computer grade would not take into account certain aspects of a coin which help determine price. Specifically, eye appeal and other aesthetic considerations cannot be evaluated by a computer—so, while a computer-graded coin might be correctly graded, it would still be subject to human consideration when it came to determining its value.

A final question in some people's minds is whether the computer can be fooled. If you plug a coin with a hole in it, will the computer be able to spot it? That's among the most important concerns about the systems likely to evolve. Moreover, if you still need trained graders for certain considerations, what might that do to the price of a computer-graded coin?

Whether you come down on the side of the welcoming committee or can be counted among the skeptical, the issue is upon us. It will not be too long before the first computer grading system is unveiled—and, when that happens, many of these issues now discussed in abstract terms will become hot topics of the day.

For the present, dealers are divided into every possible viewpoint when it comes to computer grading.

"I would think we will see a computer grading coins in the near future," said Manhasset, New York, coin dealer Anthony Swiatek. "If the scientists know what they are doing, standards could be established as far as marks, hits, nicks and scratches in critical locations so that, if you have so many marks, you could not call that coin an MS-65."

"The difficulty for computer grading," he added, "will definitely come in terms of eye appeal. As it says in the Heritage catalog, no two coins are alike."

Even with that concern, Swiatek sees some potential for computer grading. "A coin which a grading service might grade optimistically would not get that grade from the computer," he said. "It's the eye appeal which the computer could not incorporate. Perhaps a service could figure out a way to incorporate that factor into the final grade."

Asked whether the public would feel more comfortable with a computer-assigned grade, Swiatek replied: "If it was being run by a reputable company. Then, for the public, it would be a positive step as they might well trust the machine more than they do a man."

As for his own feelings on the matter, Swiatek said: "Anything that would help the hobby is fine with me. At this point, I think NGC has done a great job—but if computer grading will help the hobby, I'm all for it."

New York dealer and author Scott A. Travers takes a cautious view on computer grading.

"We'll see some attempts made to computerize coin grading, but, in my opinion, most of them are going to be far less than successful," Travers said.

"Grading is a process of subjective evaluation, but it's a consensus of subjectivity that makes it somewhat objective. The computer grader will be one subjective element taken into consideration with other subjective elements, and from that we can derive a consensus grade. There is no way a computer in and of itself can derive a consensus grade."

Travers is not against computers. In fact, he sees some potential uses for them.

"The computer has significant and constructive attributes that can be used within the grading services themselves," he remarked. "For instance, consistency checks. They can also make sure that coins are not resubmitted a number of times. That is because a coin-grading computer can in a sense take a fingerprint of every coin that comes through. If a coin is resubmitted, the computer can automatically spot that and call up the grade for that coin. That would end the practice of resubmitting a coin two or three or four or 500 times, even

Over 95% of all certified coins are commercially rare, but fewer than 5% are scarce enough to have a fundamental reason to rise in value.

Do you own the right coins?

Successful rare coin investment does not require extraordinary numismatic ability, unusual market insights, or inside information. What's needed is a scarcity-oriented acquisition plan that provides both safety of principal and an adequate return.

If you invest in coins that are too common to have a fundamental reason to rise in value, you will have poor results just as surely as you're reading this sentence.

PCGS has certified over 90,000 Morgan dollars and more than 40,000 walking liberty halves MS65 and up. They've graded in excess of 35,000 $20 St. Gaudens MS64 and higher.

With 90,000 coins certified, it is understandable that common MS65 Morgan dollars have lost two thirds of their value since 1986. Yet 52 scarce dates – exactly half the dates in the series – have more than doubled in value.

A recent study (The Winning Edge, Issue #139) shows that while a portfolio of common certified Type coins fell 26% in value since 1986, a portfolio of scarcer issues registered an 81% increase. A group of plentiful commems showed a 46% loss, a scarcer group rose 74%.

Clearly, long term performance in rare coins is based primarily on scarcity. If profit is your motive, your most prudent course is to hold truly scarce, highly liquid PCGS and NGC certified coins for five years or more. By taking a long-term position, you can nullify the effects of periodic market swings and keep your transaction costs to a minimum.

If you wish to take an earnest, considered approach to investing in rare coins, we have just published a special 10-page report that you will find helpful. Topics include

Canadian SLABS

Modern Grading Heads North: How Will It Be Received?

by Hans Lee

The Canadian view on certified encapsulation—or “slabbing”—of rare coins is as varied as the country’s expanse from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts.

Some collectors do not appreciate it because it is driving up the prices of the coins they need. Collectors are also prevented from deriving that special tactile pleasure that only a coin in the raw can provide.

Slabbing is also viewed with resentment by some dealers because it cuts into their profit margins. When a third party’s grading is certified in black and white, printed within the slab right alongside the coin, there’s no more room to play the push-and-pull game of price and grade.

As a result, there are dealers who regard certification services as an unneeded form of policing, albeit an internal one.

However, most Canadian collectors, dealers—and particularly investors—are happy with the arrival of slabbing. There is now at least a choice: Anyone can obtain an independent, arm’s-length opinion on the condition of virtually any collectible coin.

Speaking of choice, any discussion on Canadian grading services of necessity begins with the Toronto-based International Coin Certification Services (ICCS). By contrast to the United States, where there are perhaps 10 grading firms at this writing, there’s only one in Canada.

The most common remarks heard in regard to ICCS’ grading quality are “still somewhat conservative,” “too strict” and “very, very strict.” To cite one example, an ANACS MS-60 coin was certified by ICCS as AU-55.

One major U.S. auction house described

ICCS as somewhat stricter than its American counterparts. A principal of ICCS concurred that this is indeed the case.

What’s more important, however, is that a large portion of the Canadian numismatic community prefers it that way.

A debate on grading in the marketplace must certainly address the issue of consistency. In the end, what counts is not any grading philosophy in particular, but the faithful adherence to a chosen approach.

After all, grading is still a subjective craft, regardless of whether the assessment is based on aesthetic or technical parameters. What the hobby and industry currently have is the best that there can be—namely, consensual grading.

Inconsistency is one reason why there are dealers in Canada, as elsewhere, who do not use grading services at all.

There are also some in Canada who use ICCS for strictly practical reasons. It is faster, less expensive, and involves no cross-border customs formalities.

As a general rule, most U.S. regular grading fees are double ICCS' rate of approximately $13 per coin. The turn-around times of U.S. firms, anywhere from a minimum of 10 to 70 working days, are another sore point with Canadian shippers.

Another concern is the matter of resubmissions. There are known cases where the same coins are resubmitted for grading a number of times until the owner gets the desired higher grade. A difference of a single point can mean several thousand dollars, so this practice is certainly understandable.

One direct consequence of resubmittals is that the figures in the population reports can be highly distorted and will therefore give misleading ideas of rarity or scarcity.

It is to be hoped that this practice—which does not seem to be as prevalent in Canada as in the United States—will soon be curbed. Otherwise, a quirky situation may develop where a population report shows a figure that's higher than the number of known specimens.

Yet another area for consideration is the issue of susceptibility to market manipulation. Coins that are traded sight-unseen on computerized markets are as subject to machinations as commodities and stocks are on the exchanges—even more so, in fact, since there's much less monitoring by regulatory agencies.

How does slabbing affect the prices of Canadian coins? As a rule, prices are on the increase, particularly for the higher grades and rarer dates. This upward trend became even more evident in anticipation of the entry of NGC and PCGS into the certification of Canadian coins in August of 1989. A few months later, that optimism was reinforced by high prices at Bowers and Merena, Bank Leu and Stack's public auctions.

Slabbing gave public recognition to the fact that Canadian coinage is studded with sleepers. The rise in prices of coins in the higher grades—say, MS-65 and better—is even more impressive than that of MS-60 coins. The top performers, however, are those Canadian coins possessing both date and condition rarities.

Consider the performance of a group of MS-60 Canadian silver dollars I will arbitrarily designate as "generic Canadian coins."

Between 1960 and 1970, the total retail value of these 19 coins more than tripled, from $203 to $667.

Between 1970 and 1980, during an era of no slabs and increasing silver bullion prices, the value advanced another 509 percent, to $4,065.

Today, following the advent of recognized certified encapsulation four years ago, and with the price of silver bullion in the doldrums, that same group has fallen in value some 31 percent to $2,800.

Those same 19 coins would be worth $13,548 today if they were all MS-65 pieces. And any MS-65 Canadian silver dollar from 1947 or earlier is worth at least five times as much as its MS-60 counterpart.

In MS-60, the 5-cents of 1884 took 10 years (1980-90) to double its value, while its MS-63 counterpart (not even an MS-65) took only about three years to attain that same level of increase.

Similarly, the 50-cents of 1929 in MS-60 increased by 21 percent from 1987-89, while its counterpart in MS-63 rose by 79 percent during the same period.

The marketplace has witnessed incredible price advances for condition-rare and date-rare Canadian coins—from copper to gold, from the lowly cent to the commanding sovereign.

Take the "Prince" of Canadian rarities, the 5-cents of 1921. In MS-63, it rose in value from $23,000 in 1987 to $57,000 in 1989.

Likewise, the MS-63 1870 without "LCW" 50-cents coin more than doubled in value in three years, from $16,000 in 1987 to $35,000 today.

Immense price differences exist between grades among the classics. A case in point: The 1916-C sovereign's MS-63 value in 1989 was $52,000. That same year, an MS-64 sold for $30,000 more.

Returning to that diminutive 5-cents silver coin of 1884, whose MS-60 value in 1989 was $2,600, it changed hands for $8,800 in MS-62 at Stack's December 1989 auction.

What can be learned from all this? Some readers may feel that this is fast becoming a tiresome cliché, but perhaps it's worth repeating just once more: Obtain or stay with the higher grades and rarer dates. The higher the grade and the rarer the date, the shorter time span needed for significant appreciation.

Coins that are rare in both date and grade are essentially insulated from the vagaries of the bullion market. Conversely, sight-unseen or generic coins are sensitive to those kinds of price movements.

Like Morgan and Peace dollars, Canadian silver dollars lend themselves to sight-unseen trading, and thus are becoming popular investment vehicles.

With the lively trading of Morgan and Peace dollars spilling over to generic Canadian dollars, investors may become so intent on pursuing the higher grades that their lower-graded cousins may fall by the wayside, depressing their prices.

This may very well signal a buying opportunity for collectors who are happy with the MS-60 coins. This range is, after all, highly desirable and collectible.

Of the 19 MS-60 dollars on my "generic" list, only the 1956 increased in price during 1980-90 (by 11 percent). About one third of the group held their value, while all the rest went down.

CANADIAN COMMEMORATIVE DOLLARS

1981 Trans-Canada Railway

1982 Regina "Bison"

1983 University Games

1984 Toronto

This impressive series of GEM FROSTED PROOF commemorative silver dollars begins in 1981 and continues through today. Several of these coins are considered by many to be among the most striking commemorative coins in the world. The Royal Canadian Mint has created "cameos" by giving a highly frosted finish to the features of the coins while leaving a very deep mirror to the field. The combination of frost and mirror gives the coins a tremendous three dimensional look.

Each coin is encapsulated for protection and comes in an attractive mint case. Beginning with 1984 the Mint included a certificate of authenticity with each coin.

From the 100th Anniversary of the Trans-Canada Railway to the 200th Anniversary of Alexander Mackenzie's daring trip, these coins truly reflect the spirit of commemorative coinage. The attractive designs, low mintages, and quality workmanship of these silver dollars make them favorites of collectors and investors the world over.

Canadian Slabs from page 58

If this situation is not due to the high silver bullion valuations of the early 1980s or to the current economic downturn, but rather to lax grading in the past, then now is a good opportunity to obtain these coins at bargain prices.

A strict 1990 MS-60 coin, at 1980 price levels, is definitely a better value than a lax 1980 MS-60.

How do the Canadian rates of appreciation compare with U.S. price increases?

First, let's set certain parameters. Assume for a moment that we are dealing with essentially three main categories: first, the generics or MS-60 slabbed coins; second, the condition-rare coins graded MS-65 and better; and third, coins that are truly rare in terms of both condition and date—the "classics," if you will.

We have already noted that the generic Canadians, as a group, are not faring well. As a matter of fact, they went down in value between 1980 and 1990.

On the other hand, the higher grades and rarer dates are giving outstanding performances, in most cases doubling in value in three years or so.

Generic U.S. coins are currently better producers than their Canadian cousins; the U.S. coins are, at least, not declining in value. However, when it comes to condition-rare Canadian coins, these appear to be producing results on par, if not better than U.S. collectibles, whose increases are said to be in the 23- to 47-percent range.

The Canadian classics are probably the best bet; their current rate of appreciation is about twice as great as that of their U.S. counterparts, whose annual increases are reported to be on the order of 21 percent.

These comparative observations should be viewed with a great deal of caution, since statistics distilled from volatile markets are rather fluid.

The arrival of slabbing in Canada is generally viewed positively by its dealer community, because slabs mean increased liquidity. It is now much easier to deal in Canadian coins in the United States. The formats they come in are instantly recognizable, thus rendering them more readily accepted and traded.

This, however, can become a double-edged sword for collectors in Canada. The flow south of better Canadian coins—a migration that was started about 25 years ago by astute collectors in the United States—is certainly going to increase.

It's simply a matter of the bottom line. The numismatic market in the United States is much larger and more highly developed than Canada's.

A second blow will probably occur in early 1991, when Canada's federal General Sales Tax (GST), which is a consumption tax, takes effect. This new tax, effective next Jan. 1, will be similar to the sales and use taxes in U.S. states and cities and to Britain's value-added tax.

As currently proposed, the tax rate will be seven percent. This will be levied on top of all other types of taxes, including the provincial retail sales tax. All provinces in Canada, with the exception of Alberta, have provincial sales taxes, like most states in the U.S.

By way of example, for coin buyers in Ontario, a province with an eight-percent provincial sales tax, this means an automatic 15-percent add-on every time the collector buys a coin.

Faced with such a major barrier, some dealers in Canada already are lamenting that the GST will cause a recession in the industry, if not decimate it altogether.

It follows, then, that collectors in Canada have two reasons to be concerned. Slabbing and the folly of their own government are accelerating the exodus of collectible Canadian coins.

What are the options? To begin with, the Canadian numismatic community is not large enough to mount effective opposition to the new tax, such as has been demonstrated by ICTA in the States.

Canadian dealers have the option of internationalizing their operations to better insulate themselves vis-a-vis what's happening elsewhere in North America. Alternatively, some may have to move their businesses to the States.

And what about collectors' options? Some may continue collecting Canadian coins come rain or shine; and some may quit the hobby entirely, while others may shift to world coins.

Apparently, a shift to world coins is already beginning to take shape in the U.S., partly due to the artificiality of U.S. coin prices and partly due to the realization that there are more rarities, sleepers and values in non-U.S. coinages.

Whatever the reason for this shift, at least the basic domestic coins are still there in quantity—U.S. coins, in the U.S. available for sale, viewing, study or research. The same cannot be said for Canadian coins, or won't be true, at least, in the near future.

Still on the subject of (small) size, most industry-watchers say that in Canada there's really no dichotomy, much less animosity, between collectors and investors to the degree that something of that nature exists in the U.S. Again, this is principally due to the small size of Canada's coin-collecting community. It is also believed that the investing segment is smaller than the collecting population.

It goes without saying that smallness has its benefits, too. To date, there have been no SEC or FTC-like interventions in the commercial side of numismatics in Canada.

Is slabbing going to stay with us? Again, the Canadian response ranges from resounding yeas to more cautious affirmatives. The qualified ayes are influenced by what's happening in the U.S. and by the grading services' fee structures and consistency levels.

The slabbing system as we know it now can certainly use some improvements. Foremost is the matter of consistency. Being deeply involved in both numismatics and electronic data processing, this observer is convinced that 100-percent consistent grading can be achieved today through the application of several scanning and imaging techniques.

How fast this is to become reality depends on how commercially feasible computerized grading is, and on how the powerful vested interests handle the issue.

This type of grading procedure will surely relegate thorny problems such as resubmittals, distorted population reports and inconsistencies to the insignificant background.

Interim measures could include further actions to maintain and improve ethical grading practices in order to minimize the perception that the coin industry is overly subject to market manipulations.

Credit is due to grading firms such as NGC, where polygraph examinations and trips to the eye doctor are institutionalized. NGC is also to be commended for its insistence that no full-time grader be involved in buying, selling or trading coins, and for its refusal to process modern coins manufactured after certain dates.

Another interim measure could be to expand the range of grading services. There may be a need, for instance, for mobile certification services, where the complete grading process is administered on the premises of the submitting party. This type of service would be highly useful to those who don't trust the mails and those who are worried about off-premises swapping of coins, accidental or otherwise.

To a degree, this extended service is already being provided by INSAB, which has introduced a pre-grading package for dealers and grading at major coin events.

Finally, all certifying firms must be in a position to offer a simpler grading hierarchy. It seems as if somebody has forgotten about the KISS (Keep It Simple, Stupid) principle.

At present, with Canadian coins, collectors and investors can theoretically be confronted with 44 different grades.

PCGS, which uses 11 points in the 60-to-70 uncirculated spectrum, utilizes the Mint State/Uncirculated, Specimen, Prooflike and Proof classifications when grading Canadian coins.

Even NCG is willing to handle three classes, which translates to 33 different possibilities.

It is rather unfortunate that earlier attempts to unify the grading services in some way met with failure.

What's in store for Canadian coin prices in the future? The current upward trend will become even more pronounced if Wall Street decides to participate.

Likewise, prices are going to be driven to lofty levels once the major market-makers in the U.S. get into the act of promoting Canadian.

It is also quite conceivable that Canadian coins will be listed on the American Numismatic Exchange (ANE) and the Teletrade network.

The ultimate—though admittedly rather remote—possibility is for certain Canadian coins to be accepted into instruments such as IRA and Keogh retirement plans.

If all these conditions are met, Canadian coin prices will break many records. And Canadian collectors will be forced to obtain the higher grades and the rarer dates on someone else's turf, and at higher prices.

Market liquidity and liveliness are fine, but when they turn into the type of wild gyrations we have witnessed in the U.S. recently, that is a totally different ball game. For most people, volatility takes the fun out of collecting and investing.

What is there to collect in Canadian? For starters, it is easier to collect Canadians than, say U.S. coins. For type collectors, the number of denominations in Canadian coinage is lower than in the U.S., for example.

For the series collector, Canada's shorter minting history and absence of modern mint marks mean there are fewer coins to pursue.

Finally, for those who collect neither by type nor by series, there are those fascinating patterns, provincials (parallel to U.S. territorials), decimals and French regime issues.

The investing mind may become interested in Canadian 50-cents coinage, a denomination rumored to be on its way out. Aside from the 1929 piece mentioned earlier, it may be rewarding to pay attention to the 1932 issue. In that year at the depth of the Depression, fewer than 20,000 examples were struck—the lowest mintage figure in this denomination.

Canadian gold coins may be another profitable area. Their values are more stable than those of U.S. gold because there are fewer risks involved. I'm referring to the hoards of U.S. gold coins in Europe and to major recoveries such as those from the Central America steamship wreckage.

There may nevertheless be one unknown that would pull down the prices of Canadian gold. It is said that the Bank of Canada has a hoard of $5 and $10 1912-14 Canadian gold coins (remember Carson City silver dollars?).

Naturally, apart from all these factors, the general caveat of watching out for counterfeits also applies.

In conclusion, to keep things in perspective, it is worth remembering that condition alone is never the sole determinant of price. As a matter of fact, there are those who believe it's price that determines grade.

Think about it ☺

Japanese Fakes That May Be The Biggest Counterfeiting Effort In History

$80 Million Gold Coin SCANDAL

by David T. Alexander

Counterfeiting has been called "the world's second oldest profession." It began as soon as the first coins were struck, and blossomed when leading nations went over to paper money.

Generally speaking, most counterfeits have been made to enter circulation for their makers' profit, to increase the supply of widely accepted gold coins such as the British sovereign, or to sell as rarities to unthinking coin collectors.

In the great surge in popularity of world coin collecting that began in the 1960s, counterfeits made to deceive collectors became so common that they helped bring into being the American Numismatic Association Certification Service (ANACS). The great success of ANACS and of the International Association of Professional Numismatists' Bureau for the Suppression of Counterfeit Coin virtually drove the counterfeiters out of a highly profitable business.

Numismatists, police officials and financial figures are now watching with perplexity the unfolding of what may be the biggest counterfeiting effort in history: the striking and distribution of an estimated 103,000 fake Japanese gold 100,000-yen coins. These are fabrications of the gold pieces struck in 1986 to hail the late Emperor Hirohito's 60th year on the Japanese throne.

The issue had attracted controversy from the time it was first announced. Original plans called for 10 million of these coins to be struck, but some 20 million orders were received, making it necessary to hold a lottery to determine the buyers of the 10 million available coins. But when the time came to claim these sought-after prizes, only 600,000 Japanese came forward to assert their right to purchase the coins.

An estimated 103,000 fake Japanese gold 100,000-yen coins are fabrications of the 1986 pieces hailing the late Emperor Hirohito's 60th year on the Japanese throne.

The face value was far above the coins' bullion value, making them an unattractive way to buy gold. Then, too, some collectors and many patriotic Japanese had hoped that the 60th anniversary coins would bear the long-ruling monarch's portrait, as did a pattern 500-yen prepared for Hirohito's 50th anniversary in 1976. Here would be real modernization, since Japanese tradition strongly forbids use of the imperial likeness on coins, bank notes or stamps.

In prewar Japan, the nation's schools displayed the ruler's likeness only during ceremonial public veneration. At other times, the treasured photograph resided in bombproof vaults. Much of this feeling dissipated after the monarch renounced the concept that he was worthy of veneration as a descendant of the Sun Goddess Amaterasu No-Mikami in 1946.

Instead of a portrait, the 20-gram, .900-fine gold pieces presented two phoenix birds (symbols of long life) against a sky filled with stylized clouds. The reverse bore the 16-petal chrysanthemum crest or Kiku-Mon of the Imperial Dynasty, once part of all coin and stamp designs.

The gold coins were part of a three-coin set that also included a copper-nickel 500-yen with a view of the Imperial Palace and the flower crest. Most poetic design was that of the .999-silver 10,000-yen, which pictured seven cranes, symbols of seven decades of wisdom and experience, flying over a hazy sea with the Rising Sun above the horizon.

Hirohito, properly recalled under his regal name of Showa Tenno (Emperor of Radiant Peace), was the first Japanese crown prince to travel extensively. At least one medal design showed him in full military uniform upon his return to the island empire from his historic 1923 cruise.

He acted as regent after his father, Taisho Tenno (Emperor of Great Right eousness), fell victim to mental illness, and succeeded him on the throne in 1926. A modernizer who married a single wife of his own choice over the protests of the powerful Fujiwara clan, Hirohito was nonetheless unable to halt Japanese military adventures in Manchuria, Mongolia and China.

He tried unsuccessfully to head off war with the United States, but was assured that a declaration of war would precede Japanese attack. As it turned out, only the direct intervention of the emperor halted the military die-hards' last-ditch defense of the islands—"100 million die together"—in 1945.

After surrender, he told the haughty American proconsul, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, that he would accept full personal responsibility for all that was done in his name during the war, but there was no Allied wish to try him as a war criminal.

The emperor became a symbol of a rebuilding Japan, achieving a degree of personal popularity without parallel in his country's long imperial history. At his death, mourning was almost universal throughout the islands. His son Akihito, now Heisei Tenno, received a largely American education and now awaits his own enthronement—an event to be marked by another series of commemorative coins.

The counterfeit 100,000-yen first came to police attention when the well-known Tokyo coin firm of Taisei deposited 1,000 pieces with the Fuji Bank on Jan. 31. Alert Fuji employees spotted the pieces and notified the Bank of Japan that they believed them fake. The police were then notified and the search was on for more examples.

Emerging facts seemed to raise more questions than they answered. The primary question was why anybody would duplicate more than 100,000 modern gold coins. The coins themselves did not circulate, although the Bank of Japan was pledged to redeem all presented to it for full face value in paper money.

The pieces had no great collector value, selling like so many modern gold coins at a figure just over melt. Unless the counterfeiters were working for the sheer joy of it, there had to be a most unusual motive behind this wholesale coin manufacture.

Police soon satisfied themselves that the well-made counterfeits had been struck outside Japan, and evidence began to suggest the Canton Ticino in southern Switzerland. Ticino was well-known to collectors as the source of many post-World War II counterfeit gold sovereigns. It was also home to a private mint which struck many oversize non-circulating legal-tender coins for exotic countries in the 1970s.

Connected to the in-flowing coins early in the investigation, but allegedly not as an agent of their makers, was British coin

Eras of the Emperor Hirohito: a silver 50-sen was struck with Rising Sun and phoenix birds in 1925; the brass 50-sen of 1947 was among the early post-War coins.

Japan's first commemorative coins were the .925 fine silver crown-sized 1,000-yen and .600 fine silver 100-yen marking the 1964 Tokyo Olympic Games. The 1,000-yen was counterfeited for sale to collectors.

The Sapporo Winter Olympic Games were marked by a copper-nickel 100-yen; the smaller 100-yen with ocean gate marked Okinawa Expo '70.

dealer Paul Davies, who has asserted his belief that the pieces he has handled are genuine. Davies allegedly sold 41,000 fake coins to RimPac Gold Co. of Tokyo; another 61,000 coins reportedly were sold by Swiss dealer Herman Haberling to Japanese dealer Yuji Otani of the Daruma Company.

By now, the numbers of reported counterfeits become awesome. Adding the 1,000 from Taisei, the official estimate of 103,000 counterfeits becomes believable. Pieces examined are of the correct fineness and weight; it would require two tons, 60 kilograms of pure gold to make such a staggering number of gold pieces.

According to wire service accounts, confused in their choice of language to describe this highly numismatic crime, "moulds" were used to produce the coins. The fakes examined show identical "flaws" in four areas, the wire services report, and the coins can be detected by sharp-eyed investigators who know where to look.

Numismatists may be pardoned for suggesting that the "moulds" are actually steel dies, which developed die cracks in use. If new dies were to be made from a presumed master die, they would not show the cracks, nor could subsequent cracking in daily use produce identical raised lines to those on the first coins discovered

If centrifugal casting produced the fakes, then "moulds and flaws" may indeed be correct, but such casts are notoriously distinct from struck counterfeits to a trained or experienced eye.

All of these suppositions still leave investigators facing the major question: motivation. The answer probably lies with the Bank of Japan, which is pledged to redeem each gold coin presented for the full 100,000 yen.

At the time the coins were struck, a single gram of gold was valued at 2,100 yen, or $14.48. In early 1990, the same gram of the precious yellow metal was worth only 1,600 yen, or $11. At these newer values, each 20-gram coin contains about 40,000 yen worth of gold with a face value of 100,000 yen. The difference between gold and face values is therefore 60,000 yen, or $14 per coin.

At this rate, the counterfeiters stand to make $1,442,000 profit on their 103,000 fake gold pieces. Even after intercontinental shipping and smuggling into Japan, a healthy part of this sum would have remained to repay the makers for their obviously great efforts, had not the Bank of Japan and the police been alerted to the project.

PCGS CERTIFIED SCARCE DATE GOLD

PCGS Certified scarce date gold represents one of the most undervalued areas remaining in numismatics. For only 10-20% above the price of a common type coin you can get a "better date" 20-200x scarcer than a common date. As people become more familiar with the facts about true rarity in the "PCGS Population Report" the scarcer dates will increase in value faster than common dates. For example, PCGS has graded over 20,000 mint state 1904 $20 Liberties, yet only about 80 mint state 1892-S $20 have been graded. Thus, the 1892-S has a rarity factor of about 20,000/80 = 250x. Copies of the "PCGS Population Report" are available for $25.00 and list the # of coins graded for each date, denomination and grade. This true rarity information can be worth $1000's!

PCGS $20 SAINT GAUDENS, 1907 - 1933

The Saint Gaudens $20 gold piece is considered to be the most lovely coin design ever used for U.S. coins. Because of its beauty, it is the most popular gold coin and, next to Morgan Dollars, the most popular of all U.S. coins. The Saint Gaudens or "Saint" comes in two types, a "No Motto" for 1907 to 1908 and a "With Motto" type from 1908 to 1933. The 1908 no motto and the 1924-1928 from the Philadelphia mint are the most common. Dates before 1923 are considered to be "better dates" and coins 20-100 times scarcer than the 1924 are available for a modest premium of only 10-20%. Rare dates like the 1913-S only cost about twice as much and are, therefore, greatly undervalued.

MODERN PERFECTION

Modern commemoratives and Gold Eagle bullion coins are quite inexpensive in high grade. Coins graded MS-68 or MS-69 by PCGS look absolutely perfect. The mint state gold commemoratives have a relatively low mintage of about 100,000 and the 1987 1/2 oz. Gold Eagle mintage was only 130,000. The 1988 1/4 and 1/2 oz. Gold Eagle mintage was only 49,000.

Roger Boye Is Chicago's Coin Answer Man

by Donn Pearlman

Do coin collectors get fan mail? Roger Boye does—an average of 600 letters a year.

Boye is the coin columnist for the Chicago Tribune, and every week his writings prompt readers to submit questions. The inquiring minds usually want to know how much their coins and currency items are worth. Often, Boye's replies have to gently inform readers that the "rare" items described in their letters are rather common, and that, while they might not be valuable enough to exchange for a car or house, they still may be rich with collector or historical value.

Boye became the Tribune's coin columnist in 1974. "I thought the job might last a month or two," he recalls. That was 16 years ago.

When he isn't writing the weekly newspaper column or researching answers to hundreds of readers' letters, Boye usually can be found on the Evanston, Illinois, campus of Northwestern University, where he is assistant dean of the famous Medill School of Journalism. His duties there include administrative tasks, teaching a feature writing class (including grading an average of 60 feature stories per week written for class by his students) and planning, coordinating and directing Northwestern's annual summer journalism seminars for high school seniors.

He also helps write the numismatic section of the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

His coin column isn't syndicated to other newspapers, but, because so many people outside the metropolitan Chicago area receive the Sunday editions of the Tribune—where his column appears in one of the feature sections, Boye gets mail from across the United States.

For some reason, 1988 was his biggest year for fan mail, with about 1,500 letters. In 1985, he received only 101. His 1989 total was around 700, and the average over the last 16 years has been around 600 readers' letters per year.

"I answer each one," he emphasized, explaining that he certainly did not expect so much mail when he started the column.

"I usually spend about two nights a week just answering the letters," he said. "Most people send a SASE [self-addressed stamped envelope]. One person sent me a registered letter asking the value of a circulated 1885 Morgan silver dollar. The reader almost spent more money on the postage for the letter than the actual value of the coin."

While the contents of the letters often are fascinating, Boye says he probably should have kept all of the correspondence just to build "a stationery collection" with different kinds of letterheads.

"Many letters are written on hotel stationery," he related. "I often wonder if the people actually live there or just took a few pieces of stationery from the hotel room drawers during a visit. I also get letters written on various business letterheads. You wonder what these people do at the office all day."

Most of the letter writers want to know the values of their coins and how to sell them to "get a fair deal." Some people send photographs of coins as well as paper money; others send drawings or foil pressings. One artist even drew a representation of the edge lettering and designs found on the sides of a particular coin. Now and then, an aggressive reader will submit a lengthy list of coins and request information on each one.

Roger Boye, coin columnist for the CHICAGO TRIBUNE, has played detective and researcher, among other roles, in the course of answering letters from readers.

He Gets Letters

"They ask, 'Do we have gold in our attic?' They want to know if their coins are valuable—and if so, they want to know, 'Where do we cash in?'"

While most of the coins and currency described in these letters are common, sometimes there is a valuable item. For example, one writer wanted to know about his 1801 silver dollar.

"By far the most common question I get is about silver certificates. People want to know if their dollar bills can be exchanged for silver. I have to tell them the law expired years ago," said Boye.

"The second most common questions involve the values of United States silver dollars. Third most common inquiries involve the value of Indian Head cents. I also often get questions from students who want help with their homework assignments regarding gold and silver. I've even received letters at the newspaper from people looking for jobs. Those sometimes come complete with a resume."

One of the most unusual letters came from an author who was writing a mystery novel and wanted detailed information about paper money made between 1913 and 1924. The author needed to know whose signatures were on the currency, how the money was printed, and even wanted information on the fibers in the paper.

Boye once played his own detective role by helping unite a reader with her nephew. "A woman wrote saying she had not spoken to her nephew in about 20 years, but remembered he was a coin collector and asked if I could help locate him."

Based on the sketchy details the writer could provide, Boye realized the "missing" relative was well-known error coin expert Alan Herbert, and was able to get the coin collecting nephew reunited quickly with the Chicago Tribune-reading aunt.

"I thought about operating a missing persons bureau," Boye said with a laugh.

Another reader suggested that the United States Mint could unload its unwanted Susan B. Anthony dollars by punching holes in them to resemble old Chinese coins. With holes in them, the writer reasoned, people would not confuse the SBA coins with quarter dollars.

Boye sometimes makes news as well as reports it.

To determine whether Chicago area coin customers were being treated fairly, he conducted a test. He had a woman take 10 coins to different Chicago area coin dealers and ask how much they would pay for the items.

Three dealers offered to pay a fair price of $30 each for a twenty-cent piece, but other dealers offered between $1 and $17 for the same coin.

A key-date 1932-D Washington quarter drew offers ranging from 65 cents, while several dealers offered between $20 and $25 for the coin.

"It does pay to shop around," Boye said. "People may drive to five grocery stores to find the best price for bread, but won't shop around for the best price for their coins."

Even if readers ask for the name of a dealer to buy or sell items, Boye declines to recommend specific people.

Now and then, a grateful reader will send a thank-you for Boye's assistance. "One person mailed me a grocery coupon that could be redeemed for a free can of chili. Another sent me four unaddressed envelopes, each with a postage stamp, so I could reply to other readers who did not thoughtfully include SASEs with their questions."

Because there are so many letters each year, Boye often must use a "form letter" for his reply. He sends each letter writer a small pamphlet about numismatics and has several kinds of form letters that include current values for Indian Head and wheat cents and silver dollars. These lists usually are enough to answer most of the questions he receives.

Since starting the Chicago Tribune coin column in 1974, he has interviewed many of the personalities in the world of numismatics. He fondly recalls an interview 10 years ago with the late R.W. Yeoman, the guiding light of the "Red Book," A Guide Book of United States Coins. He also interviewed the directors of the National Coin Collection, Vladimir and Elvira Clain-Stefanelli, who gave him a behind-the-scenes look at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C.

Two other memorable interviews involved actor Buddy Ebsen (star of the "Beverly Hillbillies" television program), whose rare coin collection brought several million dollars at auction, and Robert J. Leuver when he was director of the U.S. Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the agency that prints U.S. paper money and postage stamps. Leuver now is executive director of the American Numismatic Association.

Despite all the deadline work of writing the weekly column and responding to hundreds of letters, there are rewards that money can't buy. Recently, Boye received the following letter from a reader:

"Just want to thank you for all the help you sent to me [about] the coins I own and have often wondered about their value.

"I must say that my bubble burst when I found out that perhaps they are not as valuable as I hoped. One wonders and hopes that perhaps we are sitting on a 'gold mine' unknowingly.

"Well, it was fun dreaming but I still have interest in what I have and your pamphlets go into detail to help me further that pleasure.

"The 1880 Newfoundland Penny that I have treasured I find is not worth too much, but I enjoy it just the same. It was in circulation even before I was born, which was in 1910.

"Now I can while away the hours with so much knowledge in explaining the coins I have, thanks to you and your column."

Some day, Roger Boye may write a book. He wants to compile all those years of answers to readers' questions into a volume filled with illustrations.

If he ever finds the time to do that book, it could become a fascinating numismatic best-seller. ☺

NEW MODELS FOR 1990...DEEP COIN DETECTORS

Date Line: Orlando, FL
NOVICE DETECTOR USER
MAKES TWO SUPER FINDS...

The employees of KELLYCO Detector Distributors were visited just recently by a couple from Virginia who were vacationing in Florida and made a special trip to the KELLYCO Building to show off the ring that they had found. The husband had ordered a Garrett XL-500 from KELLYCO and was trying it out in the surf at Virginia Beach when he found a 3 CARAT diamond ring. The diamond was appraised for more than they paid for their house according to the wife. The story continues when, while still on vacation, he retrieved a 1714 GOLD 4-ESCUDO COIN from a beach just north of Ft. Pierce. This just shows that you do not have to be an "expert" to make some really sensational finds.

It's Time To Take A New Look At The Krugerrand

by John Iddings

Nelson Mandela had a lot to say after 27 years in South Africa's prison system.

In a brief, passing statement during one of many long speeches he has made after his release, Mandela suggested that perhaps his country's gold mines should be nationalized.

Shares of stock in those mining companies promptly fell 20 percent in value. The price of gold bullion, which had been resting firmly above the $420-an-ounce price-support level, dropped through that barrier and began drifting lower.

Other economic considerations, such as renewed fears of inflation in the United States and fluctuations in the Dow Jones industrial average, have since returned as major influences on the gold market.

But the question remains: How will South Africa's political future affect the prices of gold shares, gold bullion and the South African Krugerrand?

For fresh insight into these issues, COINage went to Clark Aylsworth, founder of U.S. Gold Shares, America's largest mutual fund dealing in the stocks of South African gold mining companies.

Aylsworth has been a frequent visitor to

Politics

South Africa for two decades. He has met with both black and white leaders there and he has intimate knowledge of the gold mining business.

While he welcomes the trend away from the policies of apartheid, Aylsworth insists that political change in South Africa must come peacefully—and that, he says, will take time.

"What we have in the South African gold shares right now is a Mandela market," Aylsworth said. "There's a lot of posturing going on by both Mandela and South African President F.W. de Klerk."

Aylsworth foresees accommodation and compromise between the two. He points to the fact that de Klerk recently lifted the 30-year ban on Mandela's African National Congress (ANC), effectively severing the organization's ties with the Soviet Union.

"The ANC has lost its source of finance. It was being supported by the Russian government, which is not about to support it now," Aylsworth explained.

The call for nationalizing the mines is rapidly losing credibility, Aylsworth said. With the recent upheaval in the Soviet bloc, blacks are increasingly unlikely to adopt the discredited Communist model.

Even if the South African mines do become nationalized, Aylsworth thinks the overall effects on the gold market will be negligible.

"When the black government took over in Zimbabwe (formerly Rhodesia), there were four Anglo mines operating. Those mines are still in operation and profits are still flowing," he said. "The need to continue earnings and reap the taxes from the mines will always continue."

Thus, even if the government did take over ownership of the mines, actual operations probably would be left in private hands. To do otherwise would be economic and political suicide, no matter who holds the reins of South Africa's government.

The future of the Krugerrand, which was once the world's dominant gold bullion coin, rests entirely on the sanctions that now ban the coin's importation into the United States, Aylsworth said.

"We won't increase sanctions by any means," he predicted, even though Congress has indicated it will move slowly in lifting the bans.

If and when sanctions are lifted, Ayl-worth said, it is clear that the market price of Krugerrands will immediately rebound to the levels of comparable coins such as the American Eagle and the Canadian Maple Leaf.

In recent months, the price of the one-ounce gold Krugerrand has been equal to or even slightly below the spot gold price. Other one-ounce gold bullion coins have sold for premiums of four or five percent over spot.

The notable exception is China's Panda, which commands a hefty 16 percent or larger markup despite that government's notoriously repressive policies.

"Lifting of U.S. sanctions would strengthen the Krugerrand immeasurably," Aylsworth said. "I'm not a coin follower to any great degree, but I know that you can buy the Krugerrand for the price of bullion right now.

"That, I think, makes this a great time to buy them," he added.

The logic is simple. Since there are no restrictions on the sale of Krugerrands that were already in the United States when sanctions went into effect, an investor can buy gold at a discount by purchasing these coins.

Since the trend seems to be toward political accommodation in South Africa and eventual lifting of sanctions, the investor stands to realize a price increase of at least four or five percent, regardless of the trend in gold prices at the time.

Viewing the future of gold on a global basis, Aylsworth said he detects a trend back to the precious metal's former status as a "crisis investment."

"In the past two years, political crisis seemed to have no effect on the price of gold," he explained. "Recently, however, there's concern about the U.S. dollar and every other currency in the world.

"Nobody knows what's going to happen in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. Those countries are looking for financial support from the U.S., and we can't even meet our own budget requirements.

"The unification of Germany, which seems to be inevitable, has put Western Europe in a state of flux. There's talk of Russia going on the gold standard...Overall, I think the trend is very bullish for gold."

Aylsworth said there is a common misconception that gold prices are entirely

33 LIBERTY HEAD NICKELS
In 1883 the Statue of Liberty was nearly finished. The designer, Charles Barber, created influenced by the Statue designed America's new coin the V-Nickel around that image. In Roman Numerals the V stands for 5 in this case five cents.
Now our readers can buy a complete 33-coin set including the rare 1885-1886 and the 1912D and 1912 S, the only mint marked V 5-cent. All coins grade average circulated and come in a collector's album. A proud addition to any investment portfolio.

ANCIENT COINS

UNCOVERED RIGHT FROM THE GROUND

These coins must be at least 1500 years old! We have just purchased two large accumulations, one from our source in the Western Hemisphere and another from a connection here in the United States. Being primarily a U.S. coin dealer, we know very little about ancient coins. Many of these ancient pieces are identifiable. Rather than sorting them out, we have mixed the two accumulations and are going to sell them as they come. At our low asking price, there is no way you can lose!

Politics from page 83

Clark Aylsworth, founder of U.S. Gold Shares, recommends hedging South African gold mining shares against shares in other countries—logic to apply to coins, as well.

dependent on inflation. A more accurate assessment, he said, is that gold is dependent on economic extremes.

In other words, extreme inflation or extreme deflation is bullish for gold, while economic stability—or the perception of stability—tends to be bearish for gold prices.

In Aylsworth's opinion, the U.S. economy is in the midst of a very strong deflationary trend.

"There's no doubt that we have a terrible deflationary bias. Huge debt is being liquidated simply by writing off assets," he declared.

"It's happening in real estate, it's happening with the savings-and-loan industry, it's happening with Third World debt, with personal bankruptcies and huge corporate bankruptcies.

Yet, the effects of deflation on gold prices are deceptive. In the early phases, investors sell gold in order to raise needed cash, depressing gold prices. The big increases in the relative value of gold come once deflation is firmly entrenched.

That makes a position in gold a very good long-term investment right now, according to Aylsworth.

"It's strange. Gold is the best protection against monetary collapse, which is what happens during a massive deflation," Aylsworth said. "It's also the best protection against inflation."

In light of the current world situation, Aylsworth recommends an investment portfolio much more weighted toward gold than most other analysts advise.

His ideal investment breakdown would devote one-third to gold and gold stocks, one-third to U.S. Treasury securities and one-third to common stocks.

"The biggest question is, if a person wants to be in gold mining stocks, should they be in South African shares or out of South African shares?" Aylsworth said.

"I advocate both places. There's no doubt that the earnings and the gold

GOLDEN TREASURE OF BYZANTIUM

Fascinating, Beautiful & Affordable Medieval Art

Gold Nomismas of Romanus III Choice Very Fine - $230 each

Romanus III was a Constantinople bureaucrat who ruled the Byzantine Empire from 1028-1034 A.D. He was elevated to the royal purple through an arranged marriage to Zoe, daughter of Constantine VIII. Apparently a very mediocre ruler, he caused his empress to tire of him. Romanus III died mysteriously in his bath and Zoe immediately married a new emperor-to-be.

The gold nomismas of Romanus III have much more charisma than the man. Christ is enthroned on the obverse, and the reverse shows the Virgin Mary crowning the emperor Romanus III. They are struck in 22 karat or better gold. During this reign these flat nomismas first became slightly scyphate (cup-shaped).

Gold Scyphate Nomismas of Constantine X Choice Almost Uncirculated - $350 each Very Fine - $210 each

Constantine X, ruler from 1059-1067 A.D., was another prominent civil aristocrat of Constantinople. Unfortunately for the Byzantine Empire, he was not a capable military leader. The Normans attacked in the West, the barbaric Uzes overran the Balkans, and the powerful Seljuq Turks began their expansion into Asia Minor. By the time of his death in 1067, the empire came close to complete collapse.

These beautiful high-grade, cup-shaped gold nomismas boldly portray Christ enthroned on the convex obverse, and show Constantine X standing on the concave reverse.

reserves in South Africa still far outshine the rest of the world. But if something terrible happens in South Africa, the price of other gold shares would go to the moon."

For this very reason, Aylsworth expanded his original U.S. Gold Shares Fund to include a family of mutual funds. In addition to a U.S. Treasury Fund, his United Services Funds also offer various common-stock funds, as well as the New Prospector Fund, which deals primarily in the common stock of gold mining companies outside of South Africa.

"One fund is all South African and the other fund is all non-South African. We don't advocate that our investors be totally in either one," Aylsworth said.

"If a person has moral or ethical reasons for staying out of South African investments, they can be in the New Prospector Fund. On the other hand, if they're strictly pragmatic about their investments, they can use one fund to hedge the other," he explained.

Aylsworth has been watching South Africa closely for 20 years, since long before that country's racial situation became an obsession for U.S. politicians.

In his view, the forgotten man of South Africa is Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, head of the moderate black nationalist group, Inkatha.

"Buthelezi," he noted, "is the head of the Zulus, which is by far the biggest tribe in South Africa. He's a highly educated, intelligent man who speaks Oxfordian English."

"He wants to gradually bring up the level of the black man's status in South Africa so that the various factions are eventually absorbed."

It's a point of view that doesn't play well on American newscasts and the floor of Congress. But Aylsworth predicts it will be Buthelezi who will play the key role in forging the many compromises that will have to be hammered out between South Africa's white and black populations.

"Buthelezi is a tremendously powerful leader in South Africa," Aylsworth said. "The Zulus are not only the largest tribe, but were also the ones who conquered South Africa before the white man arrived."

"I don't think Buthelezi will support an immediate black takeover in South Africa, because he realizes the country would go down the drain economically."

Aylsworth's advice to the pragmatic investor is to hedge his investments while remaining open to the tremendous growth opportunities that lie ahead.

As far as gold goes, that means hedging high performance South African gold mining shares against high-potential shares in countries such as Australia, Canada and the United States.

Carried a step farther, the same logic could be applied to coins. Bargain price Krugerrands could be hedged against politically safe Eagles and Maple Leafs.

Unlike some gold fans, Aylsworth is not at all adverse to common stock. In fact he sees great things ahead for the world's stock markets, even in the face of many brewing economic crises.

"You see, there's just an unbelievably large new market emerging in Europe, and in the long run it's very bullish," he remarked. "Those people are all eventually going to buy cars and TV sets and the whole ball of wax. There's going to be a lot of selling going on."

"I'm not saying to stay out of equities—not at all. I'm saying hedge all your bets. Own some gold, own some Treasury bills and own some equities."

For strict investment purposes, Aylsworth recommends gold shares for the investor who is bullish on gold. The reason, he explained, is that gold shares offer a high degree of leverage.

If an investor buys gold bullion for $400 and the price rises to $420, that represents a five-percent increase in value.

If, however, the same investor buys a share of gold mining stock in a company that must pay $350 to extract an ounce of gold from the ground, and the price of gold goes from $400 to $420, the increase raises that company's profit margin from $50 to $70 per ounce—a full 40 percent.

Aylsworth said this is why gold shares tend to rise and fall in value faster than bullion. When the price of gold is rising, the gold shares rise at a much faster rate. Conversely, when gold prices fall, the share prices tend to fall much more rapidly.

"For both the marginal mines and the large mines, profit margins rise and fall exponentially with the price of bullion," Aylsworth concluded.

Some of the major South African mines can produce gold for as little as $200 per ounce, simply because the ore is so rich. In other parts of the world, mines remain closed because of their inability to operate profitably even at gold prices of $400 or more.

"On the gold side, I've never been an advocate of large coin or bullion holdings. But, in the event of total monetary collapse, you'd better have some coins to buy what you need to exist," Aylsworth said.

For survival purposes, Aylsworth leans more toward junk silver coins—heavily circulated, pre-1965 U.S. silver coinage.

"In the event of total economic collapse," he noted, "you could probably take a gold Krugerrand to the grocery store and buy the whole store. But how are you going to get change?"

"People won't be sure it's gold. They'll want to weigh it and assay it. But everyone recognizes a silver dime or quarter."

"I don't think there will be total economic collapse," Aylsworth said. "But, if you wanted to insure yourself against that possibility, I don't think it would be a stupid thing to do." □

Impending Changes In South Africa Call For A New Look At Its Coinage

by David T. Alexander

When African National Congress hero Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela left Victor Verster Prison Farm in late February, immediate and far-reaching change seemed at hand for his country, South Africa. Of interest to coin collectors will be the changes in that nation's long-stable coins and bank notes, which have never depicted a black African.

Collectors taking a refresher course on South Africa must see many close parallels between the histories of the U.S.A. and R.S.A. (Republic of South Africa). In both countries, European settlement began in earnest in the 17th century—1620 in the U.S.A., 1652 in the R.S.A.

Both New York and Cape Town were settled by the Dutch and, as a result, both boast a Broadway. Both were later taken by the British and became their countries' leading cities while the frontier moved inland. Settlers in both countries warred with native groups, wresting control of land and resources by force. But here the similarity ends.

The Americans essentially eliminated the Indians by war and disease, preserving comparatively few on poverty-stricken reservations. In South Africa, black African tribes survived the 19th-century struggles with English- and Dutch-speaking South Africans, once called Boers or "farmers" but now a separate nation called the Afrikaners. Today, blacks outnumber descendants of European settlers roughly 20 to 3.

Unlike the United States, where persons of mixed race have been regarded simply as black, South African tradition recognizes two other non-white groups as distinct from black Africans: the mixed-race Coloured (Kleurling in Afrikaans) and Indian or Asian.

Recalling the South African pioneer era, social historian C.R. De Kiewiet wrote in 1941: "It was not a romantic frontier like the American West or heroic like the North-West Frontier of India. Legend has denied the Pongos, for example, a place beside the Pawnees or Pathans. The stuff of legends is not easily found in a process which turned the Ama-Xhosa, Zulus or Basuto into farm laborers, kitchen servants or messengers."

In their coinage histories, both countries also track together. Under the United Dutch East India Company (VOC) and later British rule, early South Africa lacked the same kind of shortage of circulating coins that troubled the Thirteen Colonies. Since South Africa did not achieve unity and independence until the 20th century, no mint serving the entire country came into being until 1923.

Any parallel study of the numismatics of the two countries reveals another astonishing difference: American coins and bank notes have often featured Indian themes, from Longacre's Indian Head cent to the Uncpapa $5 note with its splendid facing chief in war bonnet. The Buffalo nickel might more properly be called the Indian Head, and no collector can forget the Saint-Gaudens $10 gold piece with its Liberty in feather headdress.

No coin or bank note of united South Africa, its predecessor republics and colonies, or of private banks which issued paper has ever shown a black South African, even as a vignette of the type so common on U.S., broken bank or Confederate paper.

Here is a real South African tragedy: the invisibility of Africans to the South African white. English and Afrikaans speakers study "history" as the story of

British kings never reigned
"by the Grace of God," in South Africa, only as "King Emperor," as on this George V half-crown.

Britain or the Netherlands, involving Africa only as part of the two peoples' settlement and expansion. Blacks appear only as bloodthirsty enemies athwart the path of migrating Boers of the 1830s, of English 1820 settlers and of later pioneers filling the vast spaces north of the Orange and Vaal rivers.

Paper money was issued in Cape Town in 1782, resembling U.S. state and Continental issues but in rijksdaalder or rixdollar denominations. As with American paper money, these rixdollar notes were soon circulating at 20 percent below their equivalent value in hard coin.

During the first British occupation of the Cape (1795-1803), two more paper-money issues appeared. During the three years of return to Dutch rule under the Batavian Republic (1803-06), Commissioner-General Jacob Abraham de Mist actually designed three copper coins to be struck as 1/2-stuiver, 1-stuiver and 2-stuiver pieces, using the copper from demonetized British coins.

Circulating coins were few, including older Dutch pieces, some British coppers and a medley of such other European coins as strayed by sea into the colony. Under the brief rule of the Batavian Republic, a number of scheepsgulden—silver 1-gulden coins inscribed "Indiae Batavorum"—were shipped to Cape Town. Although actually intended for use in the Dutch East Indies, these Ship Gulden saw some circulation at the tip of Africa.

Amazingly enough, the first coins struck specifically for any part of South Africa were the brainchild of Dr. John Campbell, an English clergyman striving to bring the benefits of European culture to the non-white population. Campbell convinced the London Missionary Society that coins would introduce the cash economy without forced labor.

Receiving this blessing was a mixed-race group of white and Hottentot ancestry originally called by the High Dutch name Bastaards ("and proud of it," as writer Stuart Cloete noted), which Campbell renamed the Griquas. "Baster" is the

S.J.P. Kruger, "Oom Paul," was portrayed on South African Republic (ZAR) coins, including the silver 2-shillings and half-crown struck at Pretoria.

English was always an official language, as Dutch was at first, with its spelling of "Zuid Afrika, penny." Modern Afrikaans spells it "Suid Afrika," with penny abbreviated as "1 d."

modern Afrikaans form, but to Campbell all such terms were offensive.

Struck in England in 1815 were four undated denominations: copper 1/4 and 1/2 pence and silver 5 and 10 pence bearing the dove of peace and name "Griqua Town." There were only about 1,500 Grikas in all, of whom only 42 belonged to any church. This bizarre experiment faded quickly, although the Grikas did prepare paper money as late as 1868.

British rule in the Cape saw many unwelcome innovations irritating to the Dutch colonists. Change in language, introduction of British law officers in place of the Dutch, newly imposed taxes and, above all, the abolition of slavery without any realizable compensation created serious discontent.

British missionaries such as Dr. John Philip supported the interests of native peoples, whose testimony was now accepted in court. Such activity would lead to racial equality, the Boers charged. A Hot-tentot brought action against his former master, Bezuidenhout by name, who refused to attend court and triggered an armed rebellion. Five rebels were hanged twice at Slagters Nek because the gallows broke on the first try.

The outcome of this discontent was the Great Trek of 1835-37, a vast ox-wagon migration over the mountains and rivers—away from the British and their laws—into Natal, across the Orange River to the north. The first Trekker government was the Republic Natalia, established after Zulu King Dingaan murdered his Boer guests, led by Piet Retief, in February 1838, and was himself decisively defeated at the Battle of Blood River on Dec. 16—later a national holiday, as Dingaan's Day or Day of the Covenant.

The British promptly appeared and annexed Natal, but the Trek Boers then created the Orange Free State and South African Republic (the Transvaal), recognized as independent in 1852 and 1854, respectively, by the British.

The Orange Free State issued its first "Blue Back" notes in 1865, as private banks from the Cape were withdrawing from its territory. Issued in the spirit of "Alles zal regt kom" (It will all come out right in the end), these unsecured notes depreciated rapidly. Equally as troublesome was the flood of private IOUs called "good fors," released by local banks, hotels and merchants.

More durable were the four brass tokens struck in sixpence, shilling, 2-shilling and half-crown denominations for the Bloemfontein merchants Daniel & Hyman in 1867. Appearing in 1874 were privately struck patterns, made in Germany while President Thomas Francois Burgers of the neighboring South African Republic was visiting Europe.

There are several such issues, the Orange Free State pieces including a bronze penny and silver kroon or crown struck by the prominent German medal firm of Ludwig Christoph Lauer. Alas for collectors, the Orange Free State never issued its own official coins.

Later issues of bronze, copper-nickel and aluminum penny patterns appeared from the German firm of Otto Nolte in Berlin. These bore the names and arms of the Free State, South African Republic. There also were Queen Victoria pieces inscribed "Cape of Good Hope" and even "Griqua Town."

Across the Vaal, the chaotic South African Republic (Dutch: Zuid Afrikaansche Republiek, generally called the ZAR even in English-language references) got off to a rocky start in the 1850s, when irregular tax payments made it necessary for the government to literally beg for money from time to time. "Good fors," the 1865 rixdollar notes and later sterling denomination notes were of little credit to the republic.

He Created Coins And Medals For Russia. Now He Is An American Original.

by Karl Stone

“When you put a medal—a piece of bronze—in the palm of your hand, it feels heavy, it gains the warmth of your hand,” Shagin says. “When you rub it a bit, you polish it, it regains that shiny oily feeling—you get physical contact with art. My medals get no bigger than five inches. I usually try to keep them to the size that Benvenuto Cellini suggested: comfortable enough to be held by a 12-year-old.”

It is this desire to foster intimate contact with art that makes medallist Alex Shagin so prolific. He reacts to the world around him in the way he knows best: by creating medals. And for more than half of his 43 years that world has proved to him the truth of the statement, “Culture is the first victim of any unrest.”

Shagin came to the United States from Russia in 1979, after enduring 32 years’ worth of subtle torture: Soviet-style surveillance and restrictions. He was a prime target, being Jewish as well as an artist.

But his talent was undeniable; he spent four years at the Leningrad Mint, designing such commemorative coins and medals as six coins for the 1980 Olympics series, and the Apollo Soyuz medals given to the American Apollo astronauts.

Invitations to resettle in Israel shaped in Shagin what a government-arranged visit to Poland completed: the resolve to request an exit visa to leave Russia. He knew that if he were turned down his life would be made a true hell. In the end he was fired from the Leningrad Mint and spent 14 months without income before being allowed to emigrate. The government appropriated all his work, claiming it as “the people’s.”

Since 1979, Shagin has become a U.S. citizen and has created hundreds of medals and coins for subjects that include: Lech Walesa, the 19984 Olympic Games, the bicentennial of the Constitution, the centennial of the Statue of Liberty, Albert Einstein, George Washington, Mikhail Gorbachev, Georgia O’Keeffe, Christopher Columbus and scores of other musicians, artists, writers, events and ideas. He has received numerous awards and commissions, but continues to create largely on the basis of his own ideas.

“The only source for my creativity is literature,” he states. “When I read something and feel some response in my heart, I put my hands on clay to shape the idea I get from reading.

“It was the worst crime I could commit against the Russian system, to read forbidden books, like 1984,” Shagin relates. “But when I read 1984, I realized it was written exactly on my life.”

His bronze medal commemorating George Orwell’s 1984 is four inches in diameter and weighs more than two pounds. It exemplifies his unique style, which consistently breaks from traditional coin design: His medals are usually self-standing and square or rectangular—any shape but round. He calls them “desktop monuments.”

Shagin’s work exhibits an almost prophetic awareness of history. In the year 1984, five years before the fall of the Berlin Wall, Shagin created a medal that depicts Andrei Sakharov, the Soviet physicist, on its obverse. On its reverse a flower has cracked a wall and grows through it.

“It was my very little hope for something—a little flower will grow through the crack of the concrete block, and the block will fall apart,” Shagin says.

Shagin’s hope for Russia is strong, but he is wary of recent events that resemble sweeping changes. For him, history offers clues to the political motivation behind recent Russian commemoratives.

Shagin talks about the 1989 commemorative coin depicting the monument to Prince Vladimir, considered responsible for introducing Christianity to Russia in the 10th century.

“The monument itself to Prince Vladimir was built in the 19th century, even then a controversial thing,” he says. “When you look carefully, he is holding in his left hand a fur hat that is an exact replica of the hat presented in the mid-15th century by the King of Byzantium to the Russian kingdom in recognition of the Russian contribution to the introduction of Christianity. So, obviously, Prince Vladimir, in 989 when Russia was baptized, didn’t have that hat.”

Shagin says the monument was an historic forgery meant to send a message that Russia is actually an heir of Byzantium, known as the “Second Rome.” Moscow was called the “Third Rome.”

“In the 10th century, the Russian kingdom adopted Christianity, but not at Moscow, at Kiev,” Shagin says. “In the press I read a couple of responses from Ukrainian people in exile, angry because Moscow didn’t exist 1,000 years ago.

“Today Kremlin politicians are trying to steal the glory and rewrite history. Prince Vladimir didn’t have that hat in his hand or on his head. And Moscow didn’t exist.”

Shagin sees a subtly different kind of disrespect for history occurring in America.

“Some hot philosopher, a journalist in Washington, D.C., is trying to introduce the idea that history is dead,” he exclaims. “[He says] we’re just living in a new era where things are balancing themselves with no historical reference.

“Abraham Lincoln said that we can’t escape history,” Shagin says. “If we are trying to escape or rewrite history, it will affect our image in the future when archaeologists will take care of our coins. Coins are actually like historic records, documents. If we don’t look carefully into our coin design, we’ll have a bad reputation for playing all kinds of childish games with history and facts.”

How does Shagin feel about the recent history-making events in Russia?

“They say it’s Gorbachev’s revolution,” he observes. “‘Revolution’ is just a full circle. I am afraid of such things, because Russia came from the violent revolution of 1917. Russia is in disorder now—a lot of unrest and unhappiness. It smells like a new circle of blood, a new cycle of violence.”

Shagin sees no basis for democracy in the Soviet Union, and interprets these events as simply a pragmatic response to hard times.

“To understand Russia, we should look at it as an economic enterprise,” he says. “When Lenin realized that the Red Terror of the early 1920s would bring more blood, he opened the door to foreign enterprise.”

Lenin’s economic policy lasted several years, until Stalin felt strong enough to end economic freedom for private enterprise. He then announced collectivization, and introduced it, Shagin says, with our help. He tells of the 100,000 tractors Ford Motor Company gave to the Soviet Union in the 1920s, as well as military trucks built with Ford's help in the late '70s—all meant to help Russia economically.

The Designer From

"Stalin felt it was perfectly all right to take from the Free World and use it for his power struggle," Shagin says. "The first use for those trucks was in Afghanistan in 1980.

"So, whenever we consider helping Russia, we have to be very careful with regard to their unbalanced situation.

"In the case of Gorbachev, we perceive this process of perestroika and glasnost as the freedom to sell ideas," Shagin continues. "But, actually, the Russian government is trying to make it easier for those who sell produce.

"We are looking for changes, but it is something like from communism to consumerism—not a big change.

"They will never turn away from their dogmas," Shagin declares. "Don't forget that Moscow has been named the 'Third Rome.'"

As pessimistic as Shagin sounds, he recently completed a medal for none other than Mikhail Gorbachev. The medal, he says, is his obligatory response to Time Magazine's naming the Soviet leader "Man of the Decade."

Shagin's choice would have been former President Ronald Reagan.

"I think he [Reagan] was responsible for making Russia weaker, really delivering the blow that broke its strength, through the Star Wars Initiative," Shagin says. "Russia admitted that it can't maintain that competitive edge.

"So now, when the beast is exposed, half dead, we have to watch and wait for developments," he states.

The reverse of the Gorbachev medal shows a globe spanned by the words, peace, freedom and cooperation.

"We are looking for something that is not just Gorbachev," Shagin stresses. "The peace movement, the green movement—we have to learn from all of them how to respect human rights, and how to pay more attention to what we are going to leave to our children. continued on next page

Shagin's medal honoring Mikhail Gorbachev is his response to TIME MAGAZINE's naming Gorbachev "Man of the Decade." He says it is "an historic record of what we value today."

Shagin identifies with Christopher Columbus—honored on his 1990 medal for the discovery of the New World. Shagin feels he, also, is discovering America.

"Try to see my Gorbachev medal as an historic record of what we value today," Shagin explains. "I think the future will judge us by other things."

Shagin feels that Russia is reflected not in the face of Gorbachev, but in those of his three personal "saints": Anatoly Scharansky, Andrei Sakharov and Alexander Solzhenitsyn. Scharansky enabled Jewish people to leave Russia and emigrate to Israel in the late '70s. Alexander Solzhenitsyn wrote The Gulag Archipelago, documenting the horrors of Stalinism. And Andrei Sakharov, regretting his contribution to the development of the neutron bomb, became a strong human rights advocate and, as a consequence, suffered tremendously at the hands of the Soviet government.

Shagin cites the election of a prisoner of conscience, Vaclav Havel, as president of Czechoslovakia and the success of dissident Lech Walesa's Solidarity Movement as true progress.

"So, I can imagine Andrei Sakharov being elected as the president of the Soviet Union," he says. "That is something I could see as proof of the democratization of Russia."

Shagin views events in Eastern Europe quite differently. On his visit to Poland in 1977 he was deeply impressed by the sophistication of Polish society and its attitude toward political dogmas.

"Most churches in Poland were required to display Lenin's portrait on political holidays," he relates. "But at the same time, next to Lenin's portrait, they were proudly displaying a poster of the 700th anniversary of the Benedictine Order. The leaders of our delegation from Leningrad, all KGB and Communist Party people, were quite upset, because the year was also the 50th anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution."

"They are a more culturally inclined people. They see back 1,000 years and try to build their future according to their cultural needs," Shagin continues. "95 percent of the Communist Party members in Poland were Catholic at the time I visited. Now there is no more Communist Party. The Catholic religion took the place of bureaucracy."

Shagin feels that Russian philosophy is stale, and that Russians today are worse off than the Bolsheviks of 1917.

"The Bolsheviks inherited Russian culture," he relates. "Members of the government of Lenin were the most advanced—the new 'intelligentsia' class. They were building a new society upon a well-developed cultural foundation: the ideas of Dostoevsky, Tolstoy, Chekhov."

"Today, 70 years after the revolution, Russian culture has to reinvent itself," he states. "They tried to suppress everything cultural and promote everything propagandistic."

"I am uncertain about Russia's future," Shagin comments. "If you have elected a president in this country who fails to introduce his program in four years, he will never win a second term. And Brezhnev's revolution has been dragging its feet for about six years. We haven't seen much of an improvement, unless we use an old joke that was very dangerous in my years: 'What can help build communism in the Soviet Union? Maybe a total victory over capitalism? No. We better ask capitalism to help us with investments.'"

Every one of Shagin's medals holds a wealth of cultural import. Truly, Shagin invests a part of his contemplative soul each time he puts his hands to clay.

A recent creation is his medal commemorating the 100th birthday of Boris Pasternak, author of Dr. Zhivago—a book Shagin wasn't allowed to read until he came to the U.S. Ironically, Pasternak is best known in Russia for his translations of that rock of Western culture, the works of William Shakespeare.

find coins with low populations and low price ratios. Coins that fall in this lower-left quadrant represent the best values. Here, Item 18 appears to be the best value because it has a low price ratio and a small population.

Correlation theory can be a powerful and versatile analysis tool. However, I believe this technique is best suited to the analysis of coins that are widely collected and relatively plentiful. These coins, which include Morgan dollars, Saint-Gaudens double eagles ($20 gold pieces) and Walking Liberty half dollars, are often called blue-chip coins.

Although any coin type with price/population information can be analyzed with correlation theory, care must be taken when analyzing esoteric coins that may have a small population. An example of a questionable coin might be a proof type coin minted for only two or three years with a total certified population of less than 100.

There are many types of coins (proof and MS) that I believe can successfully be analyzed with correlation theory. The user should carefully review the input and the output report and graphs to ensure that the analysis is valid and reasonable.

In general, if the analysis has at least 20 data points and has a population ratio of 10, it should be valid. The population ratio is the highest population data point divided by the lowest population data point. For example, if the highest population figure in an analysis is 1,000 and the lowest figure is 50, the population ratio would be 20. This population distribution would allow a meaningful analysis. Most blue-chip coins will easily meet these criteria.

When using correlation theory or "Valuequest," you should exercise a well-rounded approach to your analysis. There are many facets to this hobby. The key is knowledge.

Price/population knowledge is only one facet. When using correlation theory, the user must continue to employ accepted numismatic wisdom in making any coin purchase. Know the series you are analyzing. Buy the best quality you can afford and buy coins with eye appeal. Also know how to grade coins, so that you can independently assess your coin purchases.

Correlation theory offers the collector or investor the power to objectively analyze price/population data. This ability, along with sound knowledge of numismatics, should allow the collector or investor to properly utilize today's price/population data.

I feel confident that population reports will play a significant role in the future of numismatics. The final verdict on the usefulness of this information, however, remains to be determined.

For more information about "Valuequest," write to Valuequest, P.O. Box 4802, Corpus Christi, TX 78469.

Investing In FUN

Creative Collecting Pays A Special Dividend

by David L. Ganz

Coin collecting is fun.
Coin investing is lucrative.

Coin collections can be a fun investment. That, in substance, expresses the viewpoints of dozens of dealers and collectors surveyed by COINage at the American Numismatic Association Mid-Winter Convention, held in early March in San Diego.

Happiness is still possible in coin collecting, and part of this involves getting back to the basics that attracted people to collecting a generation or more ago: the ability to search through pocket change and find something worth more than face value.

Silver has been gone from U.S. coins for 25 years, but there's still a wealth of material to be found in pocket change, ranging from the 1989 quarter without the "P" (for Philadelphia) mint mark (estimated value $2 to $3, according to error collector Bill Fivaz) to a 1972 doubled die cent—still findable and worth several hundred dollars.

Modern commemorative coin issues also seem like something that every serious collector ought to consider—and not necessarily as items to be purchased from the Mint. These coins are frequently available in the aftermarket for less than their issue price. They can be topical, fun and eventually lucrative.

In fact, the uncirculated versions—not the proofs—almost always cost less and seem to have much lower mintages, meaning that they have considerable investment potential for the person who is prepared to buy now and not sell in the foreseeable future.

Buyers of coins who can afford to put away their purchases—to just enjoy them—will inevitably be rewarded the most, but that sometimes requires a strong pocketbook and, of course, a desire to be a collector, not a vest-pocket dealer.

I remember that in 1969, Tom McAfee, a dealer then living in Honolulu, sold me an 1883 Hawaii quarter in brilliant uncirculated condition (there was no 11-point grading in those days) for $19. It was a pretty coin, but there were better ones: McAfee had uncirculated specimens for as low as $12 or $15, and for as much as $25. My coin was a nice compromise, probably an MS-63-plus or MS-64.

That started a collection of Hawaiian coins that I have continued for more than 20 years. McAfee sold me many other coins—though not all the pieces in my set—but none gave me as much pleasure as that $19 coin bought on time over three months.

In 1980, when the coin market was running amok, McAfee recalled that this quarter was in my collection and made a

though the difference in price between 64 and 65 is $30,000."

Resubmissions are easy to understand, Travers said.

"If you have an 1891 Morgan dollar where the 64 price is $600 and the 65 price is $11,000, and your 64 is a brilliant, satiny example with only a tiny mark on the breast on the reverse keeping it from 65, you would consider resubmitting it," he observed. "This is especially true if you've seen other coins not nearly as nice as your coin in holders graded 65 and even 66."

"Do you think you'll sell your coin in its current holder as a 64 for $650? Of course not. It will go back in again and again and again. If, for some reason, a dealer can't get 65, he'll sell it to another dealer or investor and they will try it."

"That's why when you look at population reports it's almost humorous, because you will see the number of coins graded 64 and the number graded 65—and where you have the greatest price spreads, those coins in the population reports will be the ones where there is an extremely large number of those coins graded 64. Did you ever wonder why? It's because they are the ones people are always resubmitting."

"If you compare those coins to another where the price spread between 64 and 65 isn't so great, you'll see that with those coins of comparable rarity, there aren't nearly as many graded 64. It might be 12 of the one with the small price spread and 200 or 300 of the one with the large price spread—due primarily to the number being resubmitted."

"That could all be stopped with a computer—although, for the most part, while the population reports may give you the wrong picture, the grading services are maintaining their consistency. They're not grading those 64 coins as 65, which is why they keep coming back."

Travers suggested that, ultimately, computers could not fully replace humans.

"In many aspects of computer grading, there are bound to be problems," he declared. "What it all comes down to is that, in the end, the computer grader will still have to be used with an individual. It will not be a totally objective process 100 percent of the time, and people won't agree with it 100 percent of the time."

Asked if he sees any public demand for computer grading, Travers replied: "Not particularly. There was quite an outcry when independent grading was introduced, and the same could happen with computer grading. With independent grading, there was at least some segment of the hobby in favor of it. As far as I know, there aren't many people in favor of computer grading other than Coin World, which is rumored to be introducing its own computer shortly."

It might happen next week, it might be next year, but no one would be surprised to see a coin-grading computer at some point in the near future. □

Pioneer President Martinus Wessels Pretorius was succeeded in 1872 by the educated and worldly clergyman Thomas Francois Burgers, who ordered the first gold coins in Southern Africa, the Staatssponde of 1874. Gold was first found at Pilgrim's Rest in 1874, and Burgers sent 10.1 kilograms of this alluvial metal to the Heaton Mint at Birmingham, England, for coinage as 1-pound pieces bearing his own portrait and the arms of the ZAR.

Engraver Leonard Charles Wyon of the Royal Mint cut the dies for this Birmingham coinage. The Pilgrim's Rest gold was sufficient to produce 695 pieces from the first die with a fine beard; after this die cracked, a second die with coarser beard was used to strike 142 more gold pieces. Following British practice, none bore a denomination, but each was equal to the familiar .916-fine gold sovereign.

With innocent, childish naivete, the president surprised his Volksraad (legislature) with his gleaming coins at the September 1874 session. To his horror, his cherished coins were condemned in violent discussion as unconstitutional and, worse yet in a profoundly fundamentalist nation, as ungodly or anti-scriptural.

To all branches of the Dutch Reformed church, to be called anti-scriptural was a heavy charge. To the Christlijke Gereformeerde Kerk, known as the Doppers, it was especially so. A Dop in Dutch was a candle-snuffer, and the Doppers were accused of snuffing out all ideas offered the church since the Synod of Dordrecht in 1612.

Among their most prominent members was the rugged pioneer-farmer-statesman-soldier Stephanus Johannes Paulus Kruger, called "Oom Paul," Uncle Paul. Kruger led resistance to the British annexation of his country in which Burgers acquiesced in 1877. After driving out the British and reestablishing the republic, Kruger served as its president from 1881 until the final defeat of the two Afrikaner republics in the second Anglo-Boer War of 1899-1902.

Some five years after the British defeat, South African and world history were changed by the discovery of the vast gold deposits on the Witwatersrand (the Ridge of the White Waters) in the southern Transvaal. Overnight, a sleepy rural republic became a mining giant, flooded by thousands of desperate gold-seekers and the hangers-on that accompany any gold rush, all called Uitlanders (outlanders) by the stolid Boers.

An immediate effect of this new wealth was the creation of the National Bank of the South African Republic Ltd. in 1890. A State Mint at Pretoria was established in 1891.

Although he had criticized Burgers for using his own portrait on the 1874 coins, Kruger placed his own likeness on the first

ZAR bronze, silver and gold coins minted in 1892.

Dies were made at the Royal Prussian Mint in Berlin, Germany, and, in hurrying to have coins ready for the 1892 election, Kruger ordered silver 5-shilling pieces and gold 10-shilling and 1-pound coins struck in Berlin as well. Mint engraver Otto Schultz innocently placed his initials OS on the president's bust, and gave the wagon on the republic's coat of arms two shafts and equal-sized front and rear wheels.

OS in Dutch spelled "Ox," and a proper trek-wagon had a single shaft or disselboom in front, to either side of which oxen were in-spanned. The rear wheels were always substantially larger, as well. Pretoria-struck coins deleted the offending initials and all later hubs and master dies would show a single shaft. The Kruger pieces remained in circulation for decades after the Boer War throughout South Africa.

The last creative gasp of ZAR gold coinage was the Veld Pond of 1902, struck at Pilgrim's Rest at the direction of P.J. Kloppers, "Master of the State Mint in the Field," with a simple ZAR monogram and the denomination een pond.

The first national South African coinage began in 1923, after the union of the two former republics and British colonies and the First World War. This coinage was identical to the British in denominations, sizes and metals, from the bronze farthing to the gold sovereign, although no crown would appear until 1947.

A crowned bust of George V appeared with the short Latin title "George V King Emperor." There could be no "by the Grace of God" for a country unified only after a pitiless war which gave the world the term "concentration camp."

Reverse designs included Biblical references, flowers and heraldry.

The humble farthing bore two sparrows, inspired by the Gospel of St. Matthew ("Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall to the ground but your Father know it").

The ship of Cape Town founder Jan van Riebeeck appeared on the half penny and penny; later, three and sixpence coins bore protea blossoms. Hope and her anchor stood on the shilling, while the Union coat of arms dominated the florin and half crown. Pistrucci's St. George slew his dragon on the gold sovereign and half sovereign. All these designs survived with minor modifications until decimalization in 1961.

Modifications included changes to reflect the supplanting of High or Netherlands Dutch (Zuid Afrika) by Afrikaans (Suid-Afrika). Since penny and shilling were not the same word in Afrikaans and English, later coins substituted "1 S" for 1 shilling, while 2½ shillings became "2 S"

•PLEASE NOTE: A Slider Uncirculated coin is a coin which exhibits a minute amount of circulation. Superior in quality to an ordinary AU coin, but not quite fully uncirculated, our Slider Uncirculated coins are selected not only for the minutest amount of wear but also for lack of abrasion and fullness of strike. At today's high prices for nice BU coins these coins represent what we believe is good old fashioned value (for your money). We're sure you will be pleased.

South Africa's first silver crown hailed the royal visit of 1947; another marked the tercentenary of Cape Town in 1952. In the first decimal coinage, this denomination became a 50-cent piece.

South African history took an abrupt turn in 1948, when the Afrikaner and Republican-minded National Party was swept to power in postwar elections. Field Marshal J.C. Smuts and the United Party became the opposition as the Nationalists built their system of total racial segregation, apartheid. After 1948, most world press headlines would center on the racial question.

Departure from the Commonwealth of Nations as the country became the Republic of South Africa in 1960 was followed by decimalization of the coinage, with a decimal unit called the rand, equal to 10 shillings.

Bronze coins had no decimal equivalent and were demonetized, but silver coins continued as decimal pieces. Thus, the threepence became 2½ cents; sixpence, five cents; shilling, 10 cents, and so on. The large silver crown was now 50 cents, while the gold pound was now two rand.

All obverses bore the portrait of Cape Town founder Jan van Riebeeck, emphasizing again the European-only view of the nation's history. Old President Kruger soon appeared on the one-ounce bullion gold Kruggerand, which was to have been called the Trojan. The original hub of the 1892 ZAR coinage provided his bust for the vastly successful bullion coin.

In 1965, a drastic change eliminated the large silver coins, substituting pure nickel for the 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents. Bronze half-cent, cent and 2-cent pieces replaced the large aluminum-bronze equivalents, and a new .800 silver 1-rand was introduced.

Commemoratives appeared in 1947 for the Royal Visit and in 1952 for the tercentenary of the Cape. New 1-rand commemoratives honored the architect of apartheid, the assassinated Prime Minister Dr. Hendrik F. Verwoerd, and President T.E. Dönges, who died before exercising his office. Subsequent issues included bronze and nickel coins honoring President C.R. Swart, and half-cent through 1-rand coins honoring Presidents Jim Fouché, Nicholas Diederichs and Marais Viljoen.

Most recently, coins appeared honoring the 50th year of the Pretoria Mint, the centenary of the city of Johannesburg, the 75th year of Parliament, the quinquennial of Portuguese discoveries, the International Year of Disabled Persons, the Huguenot settlement in 1688 and the anniversary of the Great Trek.

African National Congress participation in South African government now seems inevitable as President F.W. de Klerk accelerates the dismantling of apartheid. Even if a name change from South Africa (Suid-Afrika) to the ANC's favored Azania does not take place, African historical figures are sure to be suggested for the coinage.

One possibility is the "Zulu Napoleon," King Nchaka, whose regiments—armed with short stabbing assagais—conquered or depopulated much of central South Africa. His successor, Cetshwayo, used these spear-armed impis to defeat a modern British force at Isandhlwana in 1879.

The great Basuto King Mosheshwe (Moshoeshe), Matebele nation founder Mzilikazi and ANC President and Nobel Prize winner Albert Luthuli are all possibilities for coin portraiture. Also, it is often forgotten that Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi, the future Mahatma, began his first nonviolent protests against oppressive governments in Natal and the Transvaal during his residence in South Africa during 1894-1914.

Few realistic observers believe that the leadership of Nelson Mandela, son of a Tembo chief whose middle name means "Bringer of Trouble," will lead to instant solutions for all South African problems. But Mandela's calls for reconciliation, for the security of white South Africans under majority rule, for equality of black, Asian and Coloured do offer great encouragement to those seeking a stable and prosperous post-apartheid regime.

Certainly the nation's new coins could reflect this national and racial diversity and symbolize this hoped-for era of goodwill, cooperation and prosperity. ☺ through the reverse - it shows a rural area in Russia during winter," Shagin says. "A horse pulls a very old-fashioned cart loaded with a coffin - a lonely horse and person carrying the last remains of somebody, probably a relative. In my interpretation, this is the Russian past being buried by today's events. It's a tragedy that Russia has to change its history and name over and over in order to comply with rulers that haven't really cared for the welfare of the Russian people.

Andrei Sakharov is depicted on Shagin's 1984 medal. A physicist-turned-activist, Sakharov was honored by the Soviet government for his human rights efforts.

"This Pasternak medal is perhaps my true contribution to Russian history," he says. "I'm sure the 100th anniversary of the birth of Boris Pasternak will be widely celebrated in Russia.

"I really feel like a lot of records will vanish - paper won't survive. Medals are a durable record-keeping material. Medals and coins are like time capsules."

What does this modern-day scribe feel about the future? Does Shagin see coin design becoming more internationally oriented?

"As we approach worldwide trade, I think it will be an opportunity for artists from different countries to design currency," he comments. "As a matter of fact, it's already happening. We have to learn from the best. I would welcome some talented Italian artist to design American coins. Actually, the best American coins were designed by foreigners or by relative newcomers: The Buffalo nickel was designed by a German [James Fraser]. Gilroy Roberts was from England. Victor Brenner was Russian. So, I'm Russian - someday there will be a window of opportunity for me.

"Coins are an artform - you can't design a coin without being an artist," Shagin states. "It's a sad thing when we hear that every congressman in the United States is a coin designer.

"In a way we are establishing standards for the rest of the world. If American coins are not beautiful, how can we feel our currency is the most powerful in the world?"

Whether You're Ready Or Not, Big Funds Are Looking For Your Coins

by John Iddings

Junk bond king Michael Milken faces federal insider trading charges.

Milken's former employer, the 152-year-old Wall Street firm of Drexel Burnham Lambert, virtually vanishes overnight after junk bonds begin living up to their name.

Meanwhile, common stocks dance wildly to the tune of the button-happy computer program traders.

Sort of makes you glad you put your money into investment coins instead of Wall Street, doesn't it?

Think again.

If your holdings include any of the so-called investment coins, especially those certified as Mint State-64 or higher by one of the major grading services, you're already involved with Wall Street.

You see, these are the coins being sought by the new, high-powered rare coin funds now being formed by the big stock brokerages. And since these funds have millions of dollars in buying power, your coins have suddenly become part of the equation.

Most of the movers and shakers in the coin industry are pleased with the developments. In fact, some think the involvement of Wall Street will be the most monumental influence on coin prices during this decade.

"The coin market will absolutely go crazy. We're going to see the most spectacular rise in the history of this marketplace," proclaimed Scott A. Travers, well-known New York coin dealer and author.

"There will be coins increasing five to seven times in value, and there will be other coins with moderate increases of maybe 75 or 100 percent," he predicted.

In fact, Travers is so confident of a skyrocketing market in investment coins that he wanted to make sure that the date of his interview with COINage—Feb. 22—was noted.

"By the time people read this article, the market may have already increased dramatically," he said, only somewhat cautiously.

"This is the beginning. This is real money. This is not rumor. Most coin dealers have been waiting all their lives for this to happen, and now it's happening," he exclaimed.

So, just what are these funds and how do they operate?

One of the really big players is Kidder, Peabody's fund, the American Rare Coin Fund Limited Partnership.

Hugh Sconyers, manager of the fund, announced recently that it would spend $100 million on rare coins during 1990. This comes on top of the $42 million already invested by the beginning of the year.

"Our fund is very similar to a mutual fund," Sconyers told COINage recently. "An investor puts money into the fund, it's managed by us—and each month, if he likes, he can redeem his shares at the prevailing net asset value."

Federal regulations governing such funds are very strict, and Sconyers explained that he wouldn't be able to make statements to the press that could be construed as promotional in nature. In other words, those interested in finding out the specifics of buying into the fund would have to contact a Kidder, Peabody broker.

Wall Street

"We sell some coins and we buy others to hold. We use a combination of many different strategies," Sconyers said. "As manager of the fund, it's my job to decide what coins should be sold and what coins shouldn't be sold. It's very similar to what a mutual fund manager would do."

Right now, the ARCF owns coins that span the market.

"We have coins that range from $50 to over $1 million. We have some generic coins. The most expensive coin we own is the Dexter specimen of the 1804 silver dollar," Sconyers related.

"We buy raw coins, NGC coins and PCGS coins. Subsequent to buying any raw coins, in almost all cases, we have the coins certified."

Even in light of the problems Wall Street has encountered with creative financial instruments (read: junk bonds), Sconyers feels that the rare coin market is a good field for mainstream stock brokerages to explore.

"Many of the products Wall Street has sold to investors were just paper assets. Many investors on Wall Street and many investors throughout America now want to invest in hard assets," he explained.

The ARCF isn't the last word on Wall Street's involvement in rare coins: "There are several more limited partnerships in the planning stages," Sconyers said.

Sconyers downplayed the overall impact of his fund's projected purchase of $100 million in coins.

"The coin market is very big. It's certainly not like the bond market or the stock market, but the coin market is measured in the billions. It's much bigger than most people think it is," he said.

The coin funds are definitely not designed for the small investor. However, Sconyers said the financial impact of the Wall Street partnerships will generally be beneficial even for the little guy.

"I think they will have a positive impact on the value of the small collector's coins," he remarked.

A new entry among the Wall Street coin funds is the NFA World Coin Fund, recently registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The new fund will be a $50-million limited partnership that will invest in rare coins from both the United States and foreign countries. It will have the option of raising its investment limit to $75 million.

The NFA World Coin Fund will be the third rare coin partnership formed by Merrill Lynch, Pierce Fenner and Smith, Inc. The managing partner for all three funds is Numismatic Fine Arts International of Los Angeles.

NFA chairman Bruce McNall formed that company in 1971 and is perhaps best known as the owner of the Los Angeles Kings hockey team.

The other two Merrill funds are considerably smaller than the pending fund. The Athena I Fund invests entirely in ancient coins and antiquities, was capitalized at $7 million, and closed its offering period in late 1986. The Athena II Fund, another ancient coin fund, was launched with $25 million in a public offering that closed at the beginning of 1989.

Frank Carr, chief financial officer for all three funds, explained the differences between traditional mutual funds and the new rare coin limited partnerships.

"The major difference is that a mutual fund invests in publicly traded stocks and thus can report its share value every day," Carr said. "A limited partnership invests in direct assets that don't necessarily trade frequently.

"A real estate limited partnership, for instance, won't get an appraisal every day to report in the newspapers.

"All limited partnerships have limitations on the amount of sales that can be made. The biggest problem is that, if a partnership trades too actively, it can be treated as a corporation for tax purposes, creating a double level of taxation."

Typically, Carr explained, a partnership will have a predetermined life of five to seven years. Partners may get cash distributions annually during the life of the fund; then the big money will come at the end of the term, when the remaining assets are sold.

"It's really meant to be something that someone goes into for the stated life of five to seven years," Carr said. "It's not something that's meant to be actively traded, although there is the option to sell on a limited basis."

Not everyone can invest in coin partnerships.

"There are certain guidelines that an investor would have to meet in terms of net worth and income," Carr said, adding that the funds are subject to the rules of a wide range of regulatory authorities.

Carr couldn't be too specific about the coins to be included in the proposed NFA World Coin Fund.

"It will be United States coins from the inception of U.S. coinage to 1947, and foreign coins from about 1450 through 1947," he said.

Not all rare coin limited partnerships are large, multimillion-dollar arrangements sponsored by Wall Street firms. For example, coin dealer Jay R. Darby, perhaps best known as the author of the Coin Dealer Rating Guide, has been managing a little-known partnership among a handful of friends and associates in his home state of Minnesota.

"The partnership we had included a limited number of people who made investments into the fund to purchase coins for the purpose of long-term gains. I had the authority to buy and sell coins as I deemed necessary to make a profit for the fund," Darby explained.

"We had an original investment of $250,000. Despite the decline in coin prices in the last part of 1989, the fund is still valued at $513,000," he reported.

Since the partners in Darby's fund are all from Minnesota, the partnership is subject only to that state's securities laws.

"It's a very private fund. We didn't want all the expense of attorney's fees and regulations to go to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Darby explained.

"Each investor bought one share, and each share was $10,000. We had 25 investors when we started and we have 24 investors now."

The fund includes coins worth as little as $70. At the other end of the scale is a proof 1895 Morgan dollar grading MS-64, which was purchased for $15,000 and now boasts a value in excess of $26,000.

"We meet three times a year. Basically, what we discuss are current operations and what we expect in terms of market performance," Darby said. "The tentative date we have for liquidation is 1998."

Darby feels that investors in any rare coin fund — or any type of investment, for that matter — should have an understanding of what they are buying.

"I don't think they should get involved until they do their footwork and learn about grading and rare coin values," he said.

Large or small, many feel that partnerships will revolutionize the coin market of the 1990s, just as the slabbing phenomenon revolutionized the market of the 1980s.

And even though the partnerships are out of the reach of many small investors, Scott Travers feels that the little guy can participate, too.

"The way a small investor can get involved is by buying coins that have been certified by NGC or PCGS, holding the coins, then selling them," Travers said.

"The rare coin partnership is not a game for small investors. When an investment like this is introduced, it is offered only to large investors, people who can afford to lose some money, because it is still viewed as being speculative.

"These are people who are interested in making a profit. This is why the partnerships are a make-or-break proposition for the rare coin industry," Travers said. "When people who are interested only in the bottom line invest in a fund, it had better perform or they're going to pull their money out very quickly."

In Travers' opinion, the investors won't be disappointed by the Wall Street funds.

"These people will make money. At the very least, they'll see paper profits of 25 or 30 percent, or even a lot more in some cases," he declared.

"For at least another year or so, it will be a snowball effect. People will make money, and they'll take more money and invest that in coins, and so on.

"It will impact the average coin owner because just about every coin will go up, including generics," Travers said.

The best place to be, according to Travers, is in coins graded MS-64 and higher.

"You can't go wrong with just about anything, as long as it's graded by NGC or PCGS and as long as it grades above MS-64," he asserted.

"By the way," he added, "MS-63 silver dollars will also go up, but not nearly as much as their MS-65 counterparts."

Travers summed up the current situation with characteristic enthusiasm: "These are pretty exciting times. I've never seen anything like it."

Now Being Released to U.S. Citizens FOR UNBELIEVABLE LOW PRICE!

Imperial Roman coins, minted long ago during the age of the Caesars will be made available to a limited number of individual U.S. coin collectors.

Authentic Roman "Caesars" unearthed by archaeologists from ancient ruins! An historic hoard of these coins has been acquired by Fidelity Coin Company. This veritable treasure trove of Roman coins is being broken up for sale to modern day collectors of ancient coinage. And we are able to offer these coins to you at exceptionally low cost.

Know the minting process and how coins are manufactured! Know the numismatic dealers whom you buy from, or get personal recommendations from friends and relatives who know numismatics! Keep coin books and materials handy to use as reference when in doubt! Knowledge is the key to acquiring an interesting and informative collection that will satisfy the most finicky hobbyist! We've been saying all this for years.

Many people, discovering error coins for the first time, are convinced their coins are once-in-a-lifetime finds, worth hundreds, even thousands of dollars! We have had excited letters from readers who tell us that their finds will "put the kids through college." Some even rent a "special bank vault box" to protect their finds. Their discoveries are often off-center Lincoln cents that can be purchased from an error coin dealer for $1. When I send them literature and the latest trends sheet on error coins, I feel like a villain for bursting their bubbles!

We also receive a lot of mail from those who have found errors (or think the coins they have found are errors). And the two questions they want answered are: "How much is it worth?" and "Where can I sell it?" Our answer usually is: "Enclosed please find the information you need (dealer buy lists). Although your coin is worth little over face value, it is a good conversation piece added to your present collection and a fine start to numismatic error collecting with an exhibit containing this coin."

We hope this discovery leads them to search for more errors. The majority of our readers started collecting mint errors through their own error finds while searching for type coins.

Next, our readers are most concerned about where to find further information on numismatic errors. Included here are four of the most up-to-date publications that should answer most of your questions on current prices, current trends, numismatic error educational articles, and what to look for in modern coin errors. Chock-full of information and expert photographs, these publications are musts in my library:

The Cherry Picker's Guide, by Bill Fivaz and J.T. Stanton: This paperback book, hot off the press, lists 165 die varieties that include many finds from circulation. It serves as an excellent introduction to error coin collectors who search their pocket change for various doubled dies, repunched mint marks (RPMs), repunched dates and over mint marks. Replete with detailed photographs and information on each listing, it also includes an area for you to include your personal information on the coins you have obtained for your own collection. A glossary, cross-reference and rarity scale are contained to familiarize you with the charting of die varieties, and to help you include these terms with your own finds. This book is a must for the hobbyist forever searching bank rolls and pocket change.

Although this book lists only a few of the hundreds of varieties in circulation, the authors solicit your input for inclusion in the next edition. Having followed the articles, research and dedication of Fivaz and Stanton for some years, we feel that this effort is one of the best books published on varieties. You can contact either of them to learn more about their new publication by writing directly to Bill Fivaz, Box 888660 W, Dunwoody, GA 30308; or write to J.T. Stanton, Box 932 W, Savannah, GA 31402.

The Illustrated Error Coin Pricing Guide, a monthly publication of numismatic error coin prices, is the most accurate available. It is compiled of the actual sale prices of error coins from many outstanding, reputable dealers. This is a must for the advanced collector, as it includes many of the rare and unusual coin errors seldom found in circulation. Also included are articles written by numismatic error experts and photographs illustrating the written material. For more information on this publication, write to: Geoffrey Noe, 85-07 Jamaica Ave., Dept. W, Woodhaven, NY 11421.

CONECA, a national club for the numismatic error collecting hobby, invites members who wish to learn, sell, trade and write to other members concerning mint error finds. This club publishes a monthly magazine full of educational articles, has a mail bid sale for members to buy and sell, includes an authentication and coin examination service for members and a library of numismatic error books, and much more! For information on membership, contact Xan Chamberlain, Box 915-W, Palo Alto, CA 94302.

Error Trends Coin Magazine is a monthly magazine for collectors of all mint errors, and by far the best educational magazine on how error coins are produced inside the Mint and how they "escape" to reach the numismatic error collector. This publication offers authentication services, a want-ad section, trends of error coin prices, expert photos and reputable dealer sales. ETCM has been a dependable addition to my library since 1968, and I consider it the most comprehensive and educational publication to date. Write ETCM, Box 158-W, Oceanside, NY 11572. ☺

Available now—The 1989 Five Ounce and Twelve Ounce Silver Panda Proofs

Complete your Silver Panda Collection at this low original issue price.

Gold and Silver Pandas are among the most sought after of all contemporary coin issues. This may be your only opportunity to complete your Silver Panda Collection with the addition of these two stunning coins. Due to their low mintages and limited number of issues—only 11 in all—the Silver Pandas have become equally as desirable as the gold coins, thus assuring their place in the collectible market.

All of the features that have made previous Silver Panda issues so attractive to collectors have been retained in these new and affordable offerings.

- Low mintage, legal tender coins
- Unique designs of the world's most lovable animal
- Proof quality, struck on pure .999 silver
- The largest Silver Panda ever produced

Unique designs and legal tender status add interest and value

Legal tender status, preferred by most collectors, gives these coins greater desirability as do the unique, new designs. The five ounce coin shows a mother panda with her child while on the twelve ounce coin two baby Pandas play under the attentive eye of their mother. The common obverse shows the Temple of Heaven. Each design is executed in highly detailed, frosted relief on a mirror-like finish.

Low mintage and high demand virtually assure an early sellout

The authorized low mintage and anticipated high demand for this latest offering in the popular Panda series indicates a likely early sellout. Only 5,000 12 ounce and 10,000 5 ounce coins will be struck—among the lowest mintages of all 11 Silver Panda legal tender issues. Already popular with both beginning and seasoned collectors, many earlier Silver Panda issues have enjoyed substantial appreciation. For example, the 1983 and 1984 Silver Pandas have more than doubled in value from their original issue price.

Sleepers

BY PAUL M. GREEN

There is probably no coin in less favor today than the "generic," and the king of generics has to be the Morgan dollar. To someone looking for cheap coins, coins being ignored, that is a perfect recipe for a sleeper, and potentially a good purchase at a good price.

Let's start by defining our terms. Although the word will probably be used 24 times in this issue alone, many are uncertain as to what constitutes a "generic" coin. That's easy to understand, since it's a term that just burst into the numismatic vocabulary, much like "slabs."

A generic coin is one with a high but common grade. Morgans are classic for this; there are enough Mint State-63 Morgans in the world to fill a lot of bourse floors. To them, you can add Walking Liberty half dollars—and, for that matter, virtually any other coin of this century. You can quickly appreciate that there is no particular shortage of generic coins.

While abundant supply is part of the problem, modest demand is another part.

Collectors are not notorious for assembling their sets in mint condition. Most, seeking primarily to fill holes with decent-looking coins, are content with fine or a similar grade. They don't have the money or desire to pay the price for MS-63.

What about investors? In theory, one would assume that investors would provide the homes for most generic coins. That may be logical, as the coins are certainly uncirculated. The problem is that investors have generally been sold on the notion of buying the best they can afford—or maybe even just the best whatever the price. While an MS-62 might be nice enough in appearance for the investor who doesn't know a coin from a cactus, it's not the sort of coin the typical investor is advised to buy.

That leaves the generic coin in a situation where there is an ample supply and a rather limited demand. Recent months have seen the impact: Generics were regularly reported to be lagging behind other areas of the market at major shows. Collectors bought the coins they needed and dealers bought the truly spectacular items for their investment clients.

If the coin market were to remain unchanged over the next few years, generics would probably continue to have their problems finding buyers. But unless everything goes wrong with coin-design changes and the continuing flirtation of the rare coin market and Wall Street investment funds, the market will change—and perhaps dramatically.

While it is nice to consider Wall Street millions chasing every MS-67 coin in the market, reality and the track record seem to indicate otherwise. The reality is that there are only so many super-grade coins out there. You just can't manufacture MS-68 Bust quarters, and if we are treated to a situation where tens or even hundreds of millions of dollars are available for coin purchases, that money can't all be spent on the super grades.

The next best possibility would be generics, for they still qualify as unusually nice coins—and if there is money to be made in them, the investment dollars will find their way to these grades. That can be said with some assurance, as Wall Street dollars have been spent on generics before, and chances are that, if those dollars reappear, they will find generics again.

A good guess is that, if they do find generics, those they will find first are Morgan dollars. There are good reasons for this. Morgan dollars are available in large numbers in lesser uncirculated grades, at prices that are not only lower than in recent months but that seem relatively inexpensive to the novice.

Another positive aspect of Morgans is that they are extremely popular, which suggests a certain liquidity. They are also large and silver, two very positive sales tools for anyone looking at retail potential.

A final attraction of the generic coins—and especially Morgans—is that they are not only potentially popular with the public but also are available in adequate quantities to enable a major coin firm or Wall Street-backed retail outlet to aggressively promote them. That is a real consideration, as hundreds of coins are needed for a major national promotion, and you simply cannot find the needed quantity in uncirculated grades for most other desirable coins. In the case of Morgans, the quantity is there, making them a logical choice.

Even if there is no substantial change in the market in the form of Wall Street millions, the best strategy under any circumstances is to buy when the price of a given item is low and interest is quiet. For the generic Morgan—which, you must remember, is really a very nice-looking coin—that time might well be now. ☺ storage (recommended for an application's extensive data storage requirements. Although it would be possible to run an application on a floppy-drive-only machine, it would be very time-consuming and difficult).

Who should use this program:

- collectors and investors who also have an extensive background in computers and programming in the IBM environment and specifically the COBOL language.

Who should not use this program:

- collectors and investors who are in any way new to computers.

The introductory material for this program says, "'Coin Collector' is not an ordinary software product." I certainly found that to be the case.

The product will catalog and inventory coins, print reports and update pricing. Unlike the other programs evaluated, this program is not user-friendly, unless you happen to be a programmer...Then you'll find it priceless.

The program allows for an almost infinite amount of modifications and variations by the user, provided you're well versed in MS-DOS at least. Just to get the brochure describing how to run the program, for example, you must be able to print out a file called, "PRINT ME" from one of the four diskettes that come with the program. Then you must be able to modify the configuration and other files of your operating system.

No, it's not hard if you know computers. If you don't, you'd be lost before you started.

From NumiSoft, P.O. Box 933, Auburn, WA 98071-0933. Program—$50. Catalog and Inventory maintenance programs—$30. Auto-pricing program—$20. Additional features such as want and liquidate lists—$10. Demo disk available for $5.

VALUCOIN: IBM and compatibles, 5¼" and 3½" formats, 256K RAM recommended, MS-DOS 2.1 or better; COMMODORE 64 or 128K in 64K mode.

Who should use this program:

- beginning computer users;
- collectors.

Who should not use this program:

- advanced computer users;
- larger dealers.

This is a powerful, low priced inventory program. It features menu-driven operation, simplified coin entry, flexible input for pricing and grading and offers printed want lists and inventory reports. The program has been on the market for the past three years and the company reports prompt shipment and good customer service.

From Valucoin, 111 Main St., Box 681D, Burbank, WA 99323 $34.95 for IBM, $29.95 for Commodore

"Honest Abe, I wouldn't put my face on anything other than an NGC-graded coin."

Let's face it. There are millions of coins in circulation today. But when it comes to real face value, the coins in NGC holders are the ones with the most honest grades.

That's because, since its inception, Numismatic Guaranty Corporation faced facts, recognizing the need for a new standard of grading in the coin industry. While other grading services continue to allow their employees to be active dealers, NGC's policy has been to strictly forbid final graders and full-time employees to buy, sell or trade coins for commercial purposes.

Coins graded by NGC are evaluated by professionals whose only job is to determine the exact quality of the coins they're grading. They have no commercial interests to serve. Thus, NGC offers both buyer and seller the benefits of independent analysis and complete impartiality. Resulting in coins that are not subject to fluctuating standards. Coins that can be bought and sold sight-unseen. Through NGC authorized dealers, and now through the American Numismatic Exchange.

By making honesty its policy, NGC has made stability a constant and liquidity a reality for everyone interested in buying and selling coins. Which is why, when some of the world's most respected financial institutions decided to invest in rare coins, they trusted their money to NGC.

Whether you're a hobbyist, a collector, or an investor, you can always trust NGC to give you the best money can buy. Honestly. GREAT CHARACTERS AND COINS

He Wanted To Abolish Money!

The idyllic life at the Perfectionist Colony at Oneida had one grievous fault for Rev. Palmer. They worked for money to sustain themselves.

Had Rev. Edward Palmer had his way, chances are that you would not be reading this column today, nor would it be likely that you would have even subscribed to COINage. There would have been no call for either. Rev. Palmer took the word of the Bible too much to heart. To him, it was not that "the love of money was the root of all evil," but that money itself was the greatest sin. Palmer advocated its abolition just as he did slavery.

As John Chapman before him walked out of New England to preach the virtue of the apple and earned for himself the name "Johnny Applesseed," Edward Palmer trod a divergent path to lecture about the evils of coin and currency. For this, he gained for himself the title, "The Anti-Money Man." Chapman walked west, Palmer headed south.

Born in New England in 1802, Palmer was ordained a Unitarian minister and was assigned to shepherd a flock in Boston. He became an outspoken critic of the evils of slavery before it was fashionable to do so, and was equally vehement on the subject of coin or currency. Palmer soon found himself without a church and few converts. He withdrew from organized religion, finding that no pulpit of any denomination was open for the utterance of abolition doctrines in which he believed.

Joining forces with one of his few disciples, Joe Whitmarsh, a printer in Boston, Palmer continued preaching, his pulpit becoming the editorial page—his words read, but neither heeded nor understood. He continued calling for the end of money as a currency. The preacher-cum-editor held to a theory among Christians that the only basis for exchange need be love. Palmer found few subscribers, either to the publication or to his beliefs.

If the word of the press would not carry his message, Palmer would do it himself—vocally and on foot. Since he preached that currency had to be abolished, he traveled without benefit of it. In trade for a night's lodging, Palmer extended his goodwill and presented his hosts with tracts warning of the evils of currency. Although Palmer found some who would accept him as a nonpaying overnight guest as he pressed forward on his self-proclaiming mission, his life was one of extreme privation and suffering.

Others tried to convince him that there were other ways to combat the evils of coin of the realm without the abolition of money entirely. Palmer was to give consideration to the groups advocating communal ownership of property. In 1845, together with his wife, Palmer joined the community of "Perfectionists" located at Oneida, in Madison County, New York. As perfect as they were, the commune relied on capitalistic endeavor to sustain themselves, and that was not good enough for Palmer. He soon quit the colony.

Moving to New York City, Palmer associated himself with a group of philanthropists that included businessman Marcus Spring. The common denominator that bound the group was a strong disgust of slavery. But, being businessmen first, benefactors second, few, if any, shared Palmer's aversion to money.

Edward Palmer, now middle-aged, joined a new colony at Perth Amboy, New Jersey—one sponsored by Spring and fellow travelers. Rev. Palmer soon became an outspoken prelector for the communal experiment and he railed constantly—against capitalism and capitalists, in general, against Marcus Spring, the colony's financial backer, in particular.

The colony's inevitable end was soon forthcoming when it failed to find enough suppliers willing to accept Christian love in lieu of hard cash. Spring, kinder in deed than Palmer was in word, presented the former preacher a small parcel of land and a cottage to live in at the Perth Amboy site for as long as Palmer wished to remain. Palmer accepted Spring's hospitality, but he never let that generosity stand in the way of his beliefs. He continually chewed on the hand that fed him. The New York philanthropist bore it all patiently and Spring even left a provision in his will for the upkeep of the property Palmer occupied. A contemporary biographer described Palmer's aversion to capitalists and capitalism as "one of his hobbies." Socialism, religious communism and anti-money crusades were some of the others.

In his later years, too old to care for himself, too feeble to lobby anymore for the abolition of money, Palmer moved back to New York City to live with a daughter, an artist. He had nothing to contribute towards his care. Impoverished, the anti-money man and his daughter lived under the most trying conditions, for they lacked what he hated the most—coin and currency. Reverend Edward Palmer died at the age of 84, on February 25, 1886, achieving what he had strived for all his life—pennilessness. (C)

EXCELLENT VALUE

RELIABILITY

SUPERIOR QUALITY

VALUE: High Volume and Low Profit Margin, permits what we consider to be the best values in the industry. Prove this to yourself. Compare our prices to other dealers. In most instances, our prices will be lower. When they are just competitive, our conservative grading will make the difference.

QUALITY: You will not be helping yourself by buying price, only. Grading is subjective. Not all dealers grade the same. Buying for a couple dollars less elsewhere, does not insure you of a better deal. Our select B U compare favorably to many dealers Gem B.U.

RELIABILITY: We challenge any organization to exceed us in this area. We have been major dealers in this publication since 1968. We have been recipients, for numerous years, of the most prestigious mail order awards in the business. We ship the majority of orders within 48 hours.

SILVER DOLLARS AND GOLD COIN OFFERING

Now that you have found the right dealer—at the right price—you only need the right product. No area of numismatics is as exciting, and affords the explosive potential as Silver Dollars and Gold Coins. As major numismatic dealers, we offer all series of coins. Our latest price offering enclosed with orders, and free upon request.

GRADING KEY: Ch. A.U.—Luster, appears unc. SELECT B.U.—Full luster, good strike, above average surfaces gets you started.

ACCUMULATE AND GROW.

You are invited to join South Park Coins' exclusive "U.S. Coin Accumulation Program." For as little as $25 per month, you can begin your accumulation of high quality, hand selected rare U.S. coins. Each month you can look forward to receiving our selections and be pleased with our excellent values. We've said it for years: you needn't spend thousands to build a successful U.S. coin holding. Start with just $25 each month and grow with South Park Coins.

YOU BENEFIT BY OUR EXPERIENCE.

Our staff numismatists work hard seeking scarce, high quality issues which become tomorrow's treasures. By being in the marketplace every day, we make every effort to make the best buys, resulting in a good value for you. Why not let our years of numismatic and trading experience work to your advantage?

GRADING AND PRICING: A WINNING TEAM.

Our current members often tell us that our prices are fair because our grading is accurate. Our policy is a simple one: we refuse to compromise grade and price. We won't do business any other way.

BONUS + ADVANTAGE.

In addition to your first month's selection, you will receive the following items at no charge: 744 page Coin World Almanac, Monthly South Park Newsletter, and the Hot Line Card.

The illustrated reading materials will provide you with a wealth of facts and statistics on U.S. coins. At South Park Coins, we are strong believers in numismatic education. We think you'll find these materials and continuing Monthly Newsletters an enjoyable method to learn about U.S. coins.
